Roy REID

Many refer to Roy Reid as a living miracle. His inspirational story of survival is the foundation for the important message he delivers on the transformational power of trust. In 2019, he was struck down by a cardiac event that most medical professionals say should have ended his life. Instead, it transformed it into a purpose Roy describes as: “love people, be grateful, give generously and make a difference”.

As a coach, strategist, and co-author of The Trust Transformation, Roy works with CEOs and organizations to strengthen relationships, elevate performance, and create resilient, values-driven teams.

Rob KALWAROWSKY

MIT-trained engineer, NCAA Academic All-American, and former Canadian National Water Polo athlete turned Human-Centric leadership coach, Rob Kalwarowsky helps high performers rethink what “success” actually costs and how to scale without burning out behind the scenes.

After hitting the edge of burnout despite a six-figure engineering career and elite credentials, his shift began with a simple but radical realization: leadership starts with being human, not perfect.

Today, he works with C-suite executives, entrepreneurs, and elite performers to break through internal ceilings, blending high-performance strategy with deep emotional intelligence to drive measurable, lasting transformation.

Chuck ROCHA

Chuck Rocha, who you likely know from CBS News, CNN or even MSNBC, is a nationally recognized political strategist and founder of Solidarity Strategies, one of the country's most successful minority-owned political consulting firms..

What makes Chuck unique is his story. He rose from a union organizer in East Texas (yeehaw!) to help lead presidential campaigns and shape national political strategy. He did all of this without a college degree and after becoming a single father at 20.

Audiences connect deeply with his message about resilience, representation, and building movements that give people a real seat at the table. He's a powerful choice for organizations looking for authentic leadership lessons and insights on the future of American politics and diverse leadership.
