ABOUT ROB

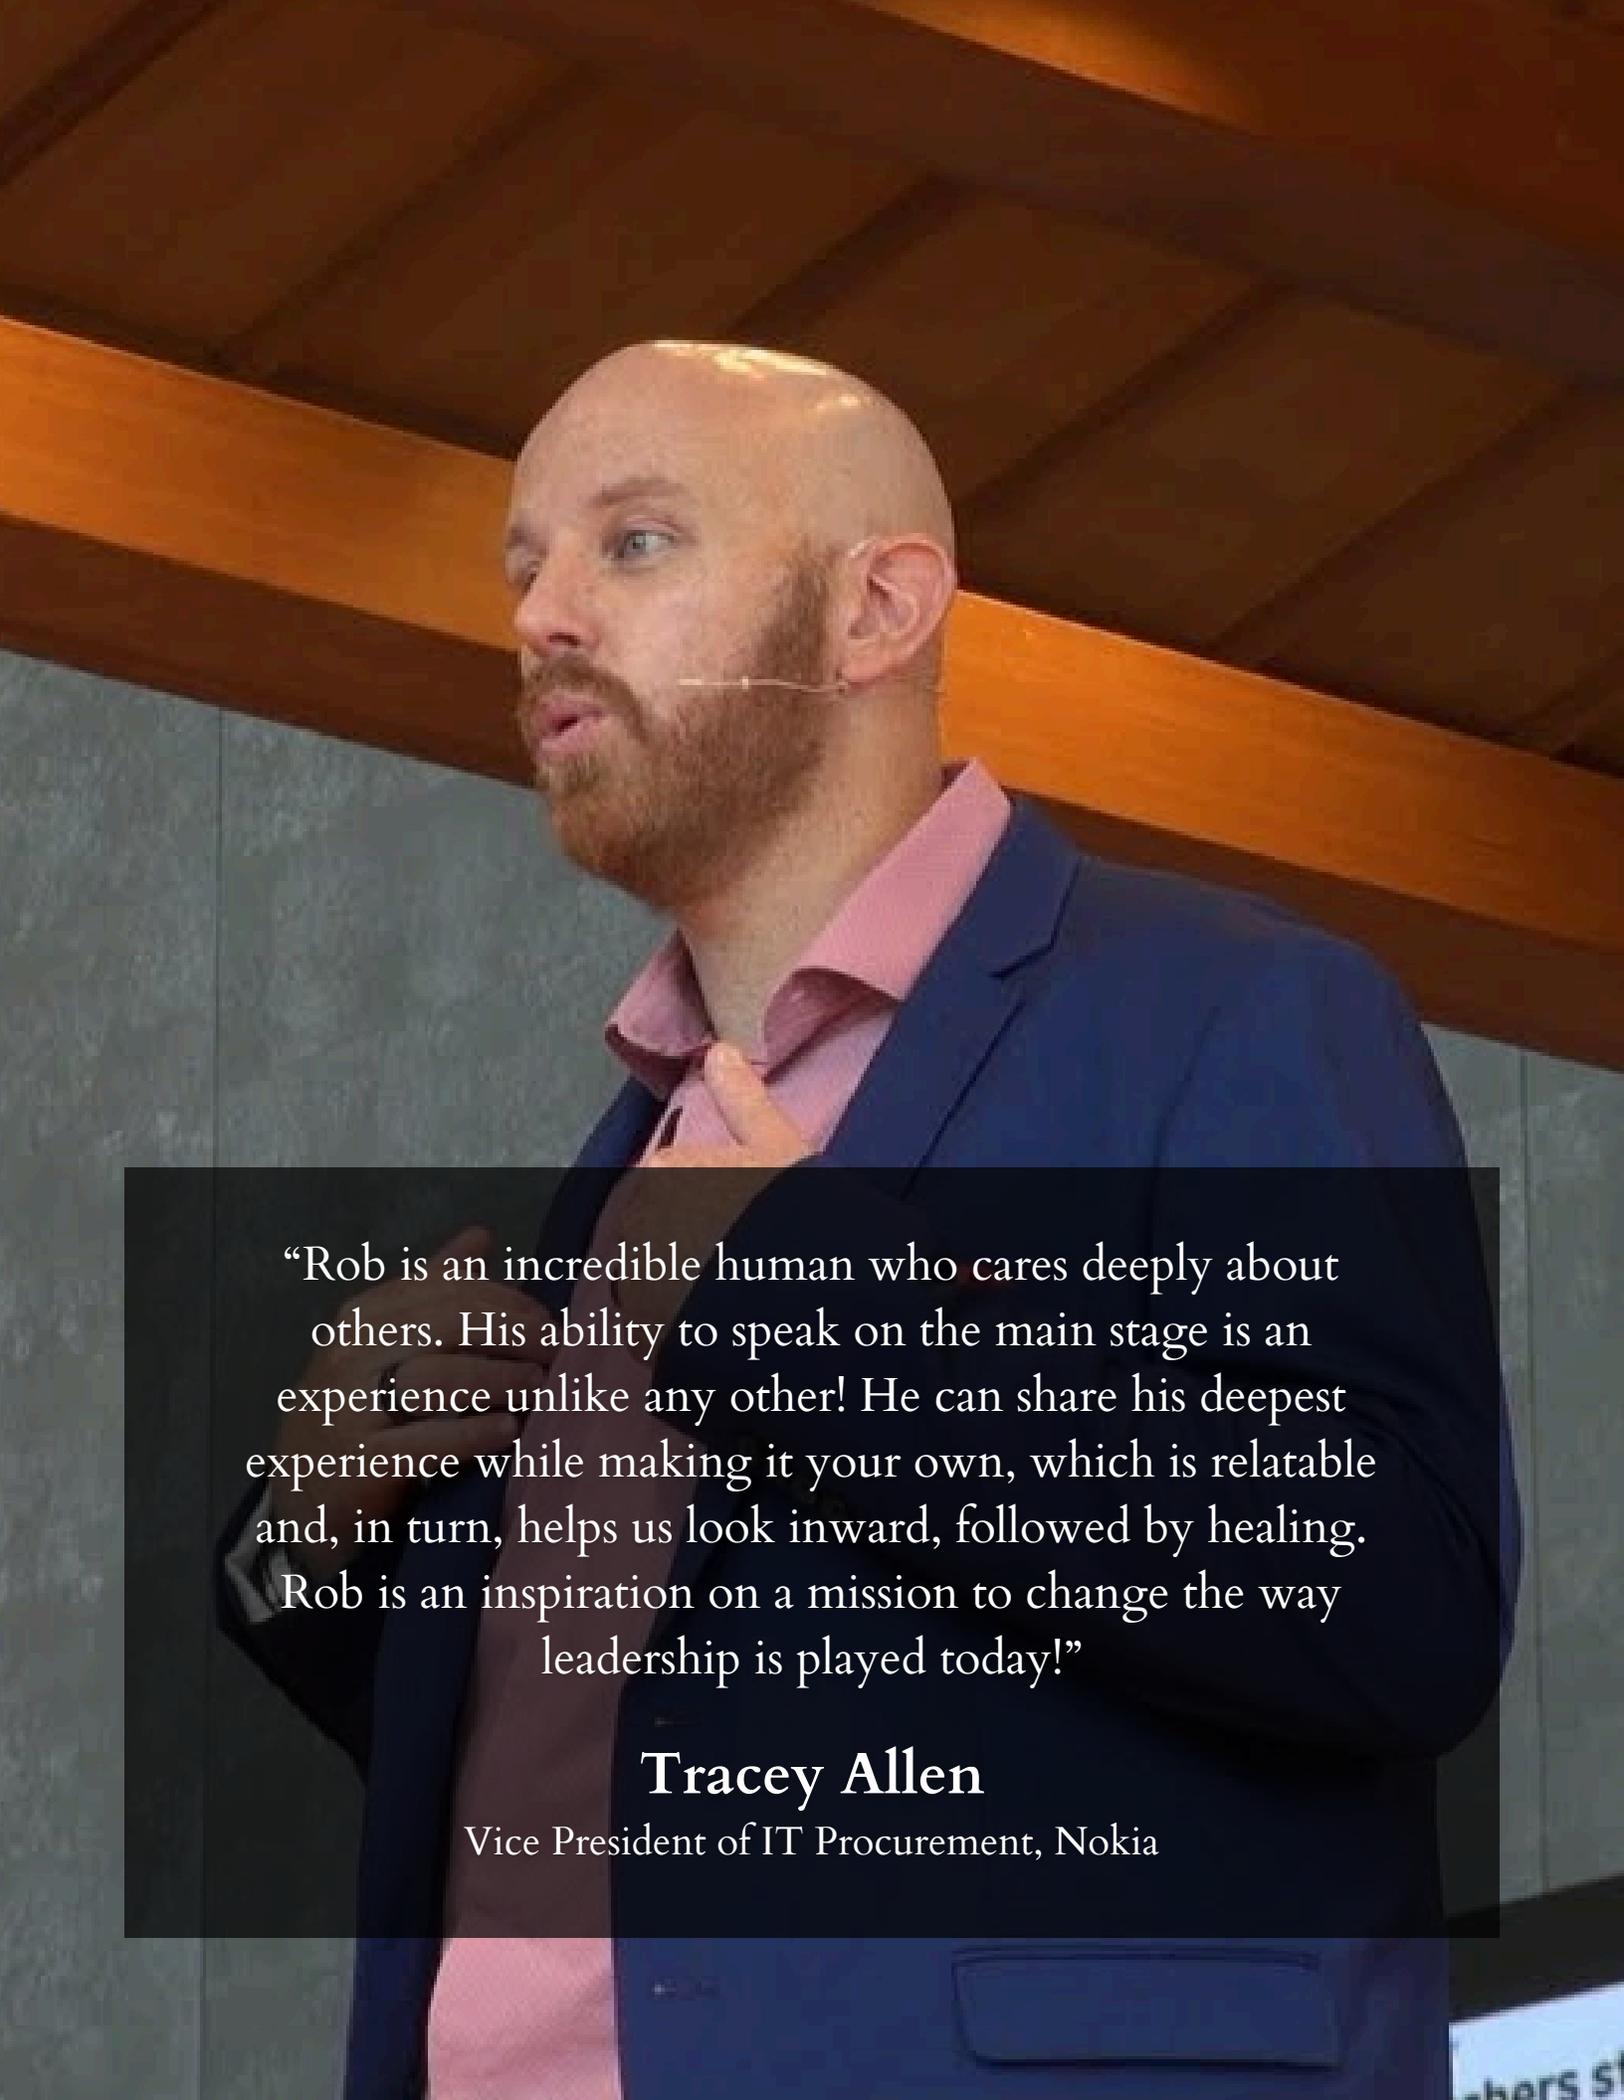

Rob doesn't coach average people. He works exclusively with high-performing individuals ready to shatter limits, rewrite their inner narratives, and scale new peaks fast.

With a foundation in elite performance and a global coaching footprint, Rob brings unmatched depth and velocity to personal transformation. Whether he's coaching C-suite leaders, Olympic gold medalists, or rising entrepreneurs, Rob unlocks breakthrough results that stick.

In his world, success isn't surface-level—it's internal, behavioral, and lasting. Rob's background is as rigorous as his coaching style. He's an MIT-trained engineer, a former NCAA Academic All-American, and an athlete who represented Canada on the national water polo team. But it's his intuitive precision, grounded emotional intelligence, and no-BS approach that make his sessions catalytic. Many clients experience measurable breakthroughs in their very first session.

He's coached the CIO of IDEO through a high-stakes job transition and personal fear unraveling, resulting in speaking invites at top-tier conferences like Fast Company's Innovation Festival and Web Summit's Collision. He's helped a once-stagnant $3M business scale to $11M in six months. He's guided top executives from portfolio managers to gold medal Olympians out of paralysis and into peak performance.

His impact has been recognized on global stages, including a high-impact TEDx talk in Kumamoto, Japan, addressing Japan's devastating workplace suicide epidemic.

“Rob is an incredible human who cares deeply about others. His ability to speak on the main stage is an experience unlike any other! He can share his deepest experience while making it your own, which is relatable and, in turn, helps us look inward, followed by healing. Rob is an inspiration on a mission to change the way leadership is played today!”

I'm Human Experiences

For years, Rob believed great leadership meant relentless drive and constant control until that mindset nearly broke him. His turning point came with three simple words: “I’m human.” In acknowledging his limits and embracing vulnerability, Rob discovered that true power, clarity, and influence don’t come from perfection. It comes from humanity. This realization reshaped not only how he leads, but how he teaches leadership today. It is the core philosophy behind both of his keynotes, guiding leaders to perform at their highest level by leading from who they are, not whom they think they should be. It’s this belief that leadership starts with being human that is the foundation behind his keynote experiences.
