Specific Challenges in Healthcare

☑ Not enough doctors and nurses on the market

The healthcare industry often experiences shortages of qualified healthcare professionals, including doctors, nurses, and allied health staff.

☑ Hiring process too cumbersome and slow

Candidates decide for other hospitals.

☑ Skill mismatch

There may be a mismatch between the qualifications and skills of healthcare professionals and the evolving needs of the healthcare system.

☑ Limited career pathways

People who want to step-up the career ladder must find opportunities elsewhere.

☑ Crisis management/Disaster preparedness

Disasters and crises are increasing both in size and scale and are happening more frequently. Ensuring Continuity of Operations under these circumstances is challenging.

Challenges Almost all Industries are Facing

☑ Unclear job classifications hinder the concentration on workforce and leadership development, which should ideally focus on core work performance and abilities.

☑ Job-ready performance is continuously subject to increasing expectations.

☑ The number of experienced replacement workers is underestimated and replacement approaches do not meet organization needs.

☑ The increase of competency demands at various career levels has not been properly identified.

☑ Fast-paced innovation increases competency demands across all positions and careers.

☑ There is a competency measurement gap which leaves organizations uncertain about their current standing.

Implementing a competency-based approach in HR enables the establishment of a future-proof talent development system that comprehensively caters to the entire employee lifecycle.

Employee Lifecycle

Selection • Onboarding • Succession • Development • Separation
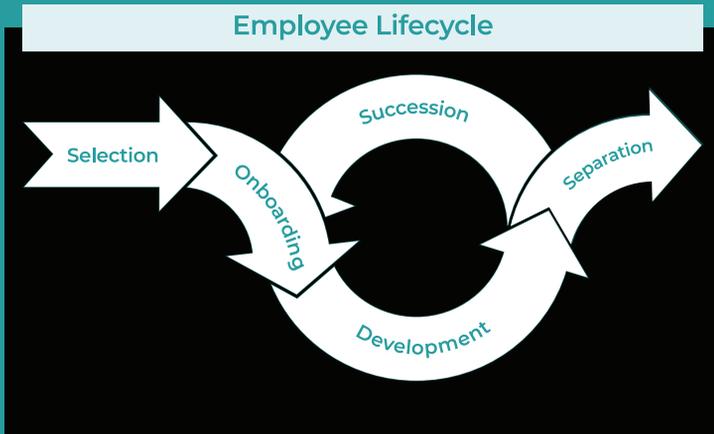

⊘ Selection

The use of quality assessment systems to identify competency attainment significantly enhances the success of job-ready hiring.

⊘ Onboarding

With such enhanced hiring practices, organizations can implement more efficient and targeted onboarding programs.

⊘ Development

When a competency framework is in place, development roadmaps that help staff reach high performance in their jobs can be easily outlined. Additionally, outlining and aligning career pathways with organization and position requirements becomes a straightforward process.

⊘ Succession

By adopting competency-based approaches, organizations can systematically develop and align succession plans with their current personnel roster. Moreover, these approaches facilitate the identification of areas where internal or external candidates are required to fill future, open positions.

⊘ Separation

During the separation process, a clear picture of the bench strength of the individual exiting the organization becomes evident. Competencies along with the implications to the recruiting and developing successors also becomes clear.

Introducing a competency-based approach to your organization is easy:

A step-by-step introduction to a competency-based approach will yield significant rewards right from the start. Begin by addressing the most pressing challenge with one building block, then move on to the next challenge, and so forth. These building blocks are strategically aligned, effortlessly creating a cohesive system, without requiring extensive planning. It is not necessary to implement all of the building blocks. Each building block independently offers substantial returns on investment.

The Building Blocks:

- Optimize competency frameworks
- Optimize job descriptions
- Optimize job advertising
- Optimize recruiting & hiring systems
- Optimize onboarding programs
- Optimize training & development systems
- Optimize career pathways
- Optimize succession plans
- Optimize management & leadership approach
- Optimize separation system
