Earlier this month, we partnered with Children's Hospital of Philadelphia (CHOP) to host the annual Joshua Kahan Fund Prom for patients and their families.

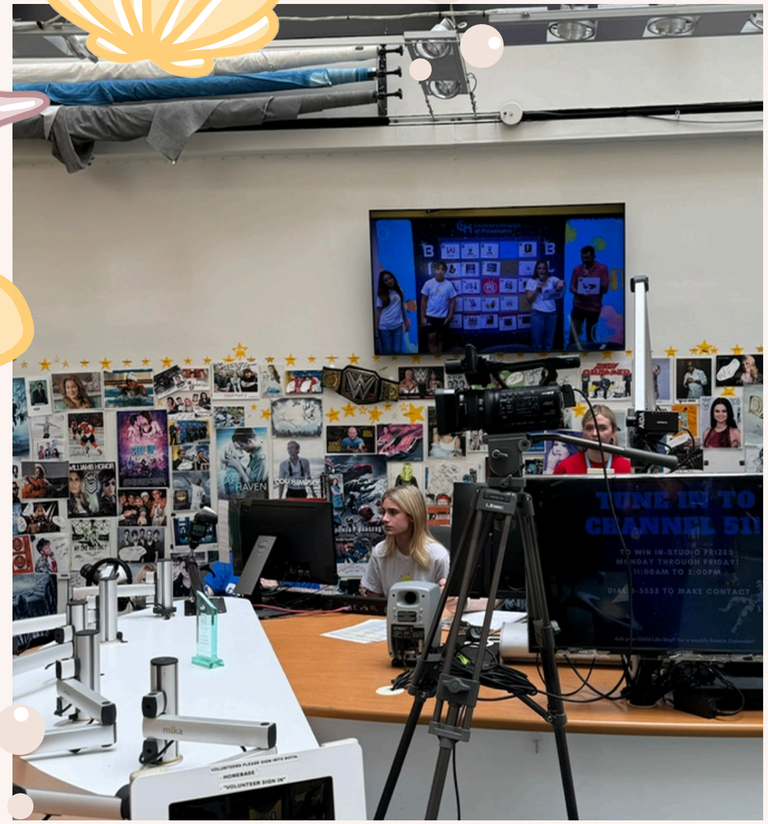
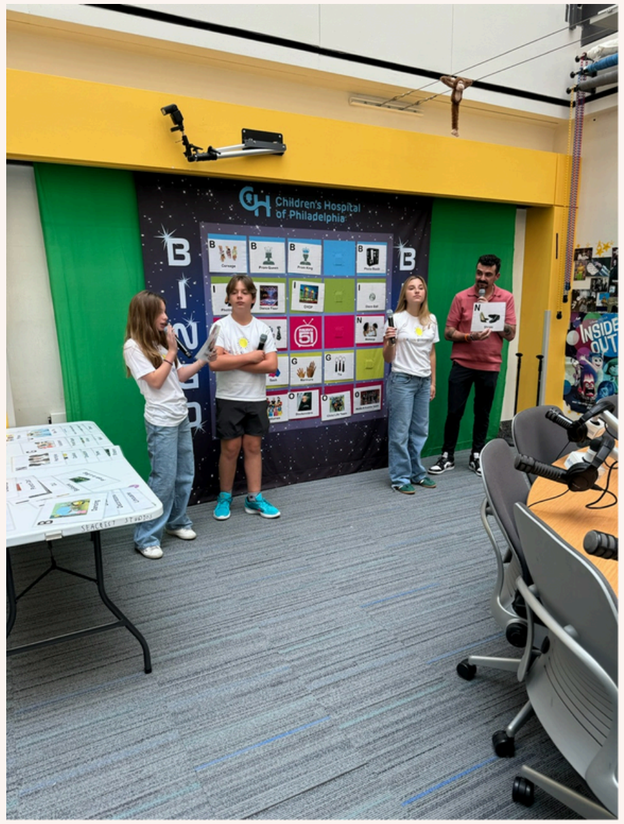
The goal was to ensure every patient felt celebrated, included, and uplifted—creating joyful memories, no matter their circumstances.





During the bingo game, we took turns calling numbers. As part of a live show broadcast to all Children's Hospital of Philadelphia patients in their rooms—across every location, including the Philadelphia and King of Prussia campuses. At the end of each game, kids could call in from their rooms to say they won and claim their prizes.

Our biggest takeaway from being part of this event with CHOP was seeing how powerful joy and inclusion can be. The celebration was all about giving kids who had to miss their end-of-year school events because they were in the hospital a chance to feel included and celebrated. It was amazing to see them enjoying the afternoon with their families, nurses, doctors, and caregivers. Making someone feel seen and celebrated, even for a moment, can have a lasting impact. We're really grateful we got to be part of something so meaningful—for the patients and for all of us.
