Rebuilding the Scene, Rewriting the Case: When Reconstruction Reveals the Facts

In 2014, a Kentucky double homicide case took a sharp turn thanks to the meticulous efforts of the defense team and forensic expert Todd Thorne, owner of Todd A. Thorne & Associates Forensic Consultants & Photographic Services, LLC.

Initially, the prosecution's version of events painted a grim and shocking picture. A man was accused of murdering both his cousin and the cousin's wife after and other complex roadway incidents. Their team of experts relies on a combination of science, technology, and field experience to analyze the mechanics of a collision, determining key factors such as speed, impact angles, braking distances, and contributing environmental conditions.

A distinguishing aspect of Gray Matter Group's work is its commitment to serving both active and unresolved investigations. They are proud to serve as the exclusive accident reconstruction consultants for the Cold Case Foundation, a national organization dedicated to assisting law enforcement in solving long-standing unsolved cases. This unique partnership speaks not only to the credibility of their work but also to the trust they've earned among investigative professionals.

Beyond their field investigations, Gray Matter Group is deeply involved in the education and training of professionals across the country. Many of their consultants are recognized instructors who regularly teach courses on accident reconstruction and investigative techniques. They provide training to law enforcement officers, attorneys, insurance representatives, and other experts, sharing the very methods and standards that inform their investigative approach. This dual role as both practitioners and educators enhances the value they bring to every case.

Their work goes far beyond creating diagrams and reports. Gray Matter Group delivers courtroom-ready materials, expert witness testimony, and visual reconstructions that help attorneys communicate technical evidence to judges and juries. When every detail matters, their expertise can make the difference between confusion and clarity in the courtroom.

We are proud to have Kyle Gray as part of the One Logic Source Referral Network. Their dedication to truth, technical excellence, and continued education reflects the highest standards in the investigative field. Whether working on an active litigation case or bringing resolution to a cold case an alleged late-night altercation fueled by drugs and betrayal. The prosecution asserted that the suspect, described as a large man, had stood on a bed inside a tiny home and shot the two victims during a confrontation. But something wasn't adding up.

After reviewing extensive discovery materials, the defense team brought Todd Thorne in to analyze the physical evidence more closely. It became immediately clear that the official narrative was inconsistent with the actual evidence.

Working alongside the defense, Todd and his team conducted a full-scale reconstruction of the crime scene. Using plastic milk crates to simulate the layout of the compact residence, they were able to accurately recreate the space down to the smallest detail. The parents of one of the victims, who were closely familiar with the layout of the home, confirmed the authenticity of the reconstruction, even noting a pitcher of water that had been placed in the exact location it had been on the night of the incident.

To take it a step further, the defense team hired local college actors and a videographer to document the reconstructed events in detail. The reenactment was conducted without any involvement from law enforcement or the district attorney's office, both of which declined to participate.

One of the most damning findings from the reconstruction was this: the prosecution's theory that the accused had stood on the bed and fired the fatal shots was physically impossible. The forensic evidence, once reconstructed and examined in context, simply didn't support the narrative.

file, Gray Matter Group remains a trusted name in accident reconstruction

Ultimately, the work paid off. Though the accused was initially charged with double murder and several other offenses, both murder charges were dropped by the prosecutor's office.

This case serves as a powerful reminder of the role forensic science and investigative accuracy play in the pursuit of justice. Thanks to experts like Todd Thorne, whose experience spans bloodstain pattern analysis, shooting incident reconstruction, forensic photography, and more. Truth isn't just a concept; it's something that can be built, tested, and proven.

Building the Defense Brick by Brick: One Logic Source in Action

At One Logic Source, we take pride in being more than just an investigative resource; we are an active, engaged partner in the defense process. Our team is currently involved in several high-level investigations and case preparations, and we wanted to share how our work is directly supporting attorneys during some of the most critical stages of litigation. From locating new witnesses to navigating the complexities of discovery, we are consistently focused on bringing attorneys the facts, insight, and clarity they need to defend their clients effectively.

In one particularly impactful case, our investigators recently uncovered additional witnesses whose accounts have significantly strengthened the defense's position. These witnesses were not included in any official reports and had not been previously contacted. Through diligent fieldwork, interviews, and on-the-ground research, our team was able to identify individuals with firsthand knowledge of the incident. Their testimony introduced crucial context, raised new questions about the timeline of events, and ultimately gave the defense leverage that wasn't previously available. It's a perfect example of how independent investigation can uncover the missing pieces that change everything.

We're also working closely with several attorneys in preparation for upcoming mediations, a stage in litigation where strong organization, compelling exhibits, and a clear understanding of the facts are essential. Our role in these cases includes helping to build visual timelines, highlighting inconsistencies in the opposition's evidence, and clarifying complex narratives through professional documentation and reports. By preparing the investigative groundwork before mediation begins, we ensure attorneys have the tools to negotiate from a position of strength. Whether a case resolves in mediation or proceeds to trial, preparation is key, and we're there to support every step.

In addition, our team is currently deep in the discovery phase on multiple active cases. We assist in reviewing voluminous records, helping to flag inconsistencies, identify what's missing, and organize information in a way that supports the defense narrative. Our detailed approach allows attorneys to focus their discovery requests with intention and precision. We often serve as a second set of eyes, looking for what may have been overlooked or buried in the volume of case materials. In some matters, we've even helped reframe the scope of a case by identifying gaps that led to new lines of questioning and evidence requests.

Across all this work, what remains consistent is our commitment to integrity, accuracy, and service to the truth. We understand the pressure attorneys face and the stakes involved for every client. Our mission is to be the investigative team you can count on for clear facts, professional presentation, and objective insight that supports real results.

If you have an ongoing case that could benefit from additional investigation, witness outreach, timeline development, or discovery support, One Logic Source is here to assist. Our team is ready to step in wherever needed to help you prepare with confidence.
