“

Why? Why? That's the question everyone wants to know. How can someone do this? And why it doesn't necessarily make sense to us because we can't fathom something so horrific, that is what we would dive into in particular, from a post-attack analysis... one of the things we did at BAU was show the timeline of how this offender became radicalized and then mobilized to violence.”

...is going to help you position yourself better, it's going to take you to another level on how you show up, and how you interact with people. You can be a supervisor now and you still need to work on yourself; because there are people that are serving in a leadership role where they have no business being there... You gotta step into that role and you gotta understand that it's a leadership role. That you are making an impact on the people that you serve and that they are watching you. They want to learn from you. They see you, so give them something to look at.”

One of the cases I worked impacted me for life due to the extent of sexual abuse of a minor. I was able to establish a direct bond with the victim, who would only speak to me regarding the sexual abuse she endured for several years by a church minister... I was able to identify significant evidence corroborated by the victim's testimony that led to the conviction of the church minister to 25 years in federal prison and 45 years in state prison.”

I went to Crisis Negotiation training at Quantico and became the office's chief negotiator.”

I was assigned as the Cyber Supervisor and we had one in our territory that was a real deal hacker that we were able to arrest, but we had many that were overseas that we were able to work with the LEGAT to get them arrested.
