

The Pantheon: A Wizard's Way

By

Daniel J.Reurink

Copyright ©
2023:06:18 Revised
www.metemphysics.com

All rights reserved. No part of this book may be reproduced or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic or mechanical, including photocopying, recording, or by any information storage and retrieval system, without permission in writing from the copyright owner.

Chapter 1

In the beginning, there lived a man of wizard kind, not of the peculiar nature of a wizard but a man of knowledge and contemplation. He roamed in solitude, lost in contemplation amidst the whispers of the wind, finding inner serenity within the depths of his soul. His soul, some would say, was veiled by a purity and virtuousness as bright as the purest white, for he was a man untouched by the Fall.

Now, within his existence, a tale resides. It speaks of a time long past, when demons and angels roamed the realm, and magic permeated the darkness. He embodies the essence of all creation, this man, a small thinker confined within a vast world. Yet this tale does not solely belong to a man; it belongs to the man who wove his path long ago. His path casts a shadow upon the radiant glow emanating from his soul.

A soul, now, signifies a state of being in which one stands in harmony with oneself. And within this harmony, all is contained, expressing itself through the prism of his virtuous nature—a canvas as pure as untainted paper. These words depict a man who traversed the land, pondering his way through challenges, jests, hardships, and entangling traps. Along the snaring path, the man of the white row strode, and here, the story unfolds.

Chapter 2

"Make silver, make gold, outgrow all on the fold," whispered the voice of chaos...

Meanwhile, in another time...

A man stood before them, a wizard, his words resonating with reason as he addressed the gathered multitude. His craft unfolded within the sea of speeches, captivating all who listened, and it commenced with the tale of Rhine.

But what is Rhine? Rhine is the realm where milk and honey flow, a place where magic takes its first breath and thoughts stream forth from the depths of the inner void. It exists as the space between all and beyond all, a land that is both omnipresent and nowhere in particular. It is but a small piece in the grand tapestry of myriad realms. This piece bears the mark of white, the precursor to the brotherhood, the genesis of The Pantheon.

"Behold as the glory of nations manifests through the sands of structure. Each passing day turns our thoughts to dust, and every particle of dust carries a thought that has passed. The totality resides within itself, embracing all things and nothingness, the many within the all," proclaimed the Wizard.

As he spoke, the air crackled with vibrant magic, and the surroundings transitioned from a dormant state to one charged with energy. From its inception, the voice drew the masses, who stood entranced amid the grains of time.

"A particle of dust is but the residue left in the wake. Our soul remains receptive to all living particles, yet we confine it through self-imposed decrees. These decrees shape our perception of reality. We are the embodiment of the thoughts we inhabit—a structure constructed upon the foundation of our chosen decrees.

Stunned, the audience watched in awe, thirsting for more as his words resonated through the telepathic microphone of magic.

Magic, the force that propels thoughts and imbues them with the essence of time. Time, a construct that engenders a barrier to thought as it intertwines with it. The forward momentum of thought can foster beliefs that give rise to systems in which all may reside.

In Rhine, time flows as a constant progression, guided by an idea. The wizard of bygone days, known as Rainbow, birthed the idea of a nation, crafting his rainbow-colored presence into a manifestation of universal unity. This concept embraced oneness while celebrating the diversity of magic's hues—many as one.

"What lies at the core of a feeling?" exclaimed the small man, fueled by an insatiable curiosity. Fortunately it was that wisdom seemed to prevail within him that day.

"A feeling is nature's expression, the outward manifestation of the seed dwelling within. It can sprout into an array of sensations and expressions. Thus, perceptions shape our understanding, giving birth to the conceptions of colors. Each color mirrors a distinct feeling, harnessing the power inherent to its hue. A feeling can adopt any color sensed by our minds."

"The mind, a being that transforms all our perceptions into the realm of human consciousness. It courses through the currents of thought, shaping our essence and guiding our destined path. Thus, the destiny of thought is intertwined with one's belief in the structures they create."

Hushed, they leaned in closer, the crowd enveloped in the trance of energy, a spiritual current that permeated through the pores of their very skin. Their skin, a canvas showcasing the myriad colors of a rainbow—a rainbow contained solely within the borders of thought.

"Urge yourself to embark on a quest for self-discovery," declared Daniel, the white wizard of the North.

"Hold steadfast to your essence through introspection, and grasp your intrinsic nature beyond the external definitions. Your essence is an idea of who you are, while the external perception shapes the image of who you are believed to be. Yet, by embracing both, one can embody the idea and existence of their true self."

Silenced, the crowd flowed with the conscious energy of his words, carried along by the stream of collective awareness.

"A being is the subjective self that views the world through its unique lens. This lens, through which you perceive colors, gives rise to emotions that manifest as thoughts. Your emotions are shaped by the objects you interpret and the subjective lens through which you perceive the world. These perceptual lenses are constructed by your beliefs and form the structure of your thoughts. They determine how you feel towards things based on your judgments and beliefs. If you see things as black, you perceive them negatively. Conversely, if you see things positively, one could assume you perceive in white, as it stands in opposition to the negativity of black."

The essence of white magic now coursed through Daniel's being. His wizardry was not something he had learned, but a natural gift bestowed upon his existence. This inherent identity propelled the thoughts and emotions that resonated through the core archetype of his being. It was this core that gave rise to the words echoing through the masses of Rhine.

However, amidst the crowd stood another man of colored nature. He embodied the essence of Red Scarlet, a hue that evoked ethereal sensations akin to blood coursing through veins. The Red Sorcerer, named Jar, erupted with a resounding question,

"If man is the perception of one's ideas, is not an idea the perception of man?"

Perplexed, the man of white nature remained silent, as the crafted answer resonated within the realm of the red sorcerer's domain.

"Man is the architect of his own existence. We are the creators of our own image. The image we fashion is thus projected through the mind and shapes our interaction with reality. We perceive others based on our beliefs, emotions, and judgments, and what we see is an idea formed from previous encounters. When we embrace the unity of reality, we can discern the boundaries between dreams and wakefulness. Furthermore, when reality intertwines seamlessly with our thoughts, that is the state of being reborn," concluded Daniel.

Jar vehemently countered, "If one achieves a perfect relationship with reality upon rebirth, then what is the true nature of death?"

"Death is the emergence of a subjective liberated self within a new illusion known as Maya," proclaimed the white wizard.

A clash of colors ignited, fueled by the magic of inner knowledge. The opposing forces of two individuals were set into motion, giving rise to an era of conscious thought.

"Doesn't one experience rebirth through death then? And what value does life hold if one must perish to be reborn?" questioned the man in red.

"Precisely! Why do you suppose you possess eternity," taunted the white adversary.

Now, let me guide you in comprehending the realm of the Red. These scarlet wizards belong to a clan that believes everything possessing blood is inherently human. They perceive all magic as flowing within creatures of blood, and a system of checks and balances holds everyone accountable. The generational balance gives rise to the decree that blood magic is both revered and perilous, thus warranting meticulous accountability. The system operates on the premise that each species exists separately, yet interconnected. This philosophy holds all individuals responsible for the natural world surrounding them, as their blood-bound thoughts intertwine with thoughts of war, harnessing the power of aggression in their minds.

Power is the sensation one experiences in a position of authority. However, in the realm of Rhine, the authority itself is the authority of an idea.

The core idea and authority revolve around the notion of living once, urging individuals to strive for victory in life. This central motto engenders discord amidst the pursuit of harmony."

"In the realm of colors, numerous primary goals exist, yet the ultimate objective is to uphold the genuine authority of an idea. An idea that encompasses the essence of all primary colors, as that is how knowledge focuses. The pursuit of knowledge takes center stage in this realm, holding supreme power and granting authority to those who can articulate their thoughts with reason, a reason that maintains balance. Reason is the force that courses through the entirety of nature. Nature is the embodiment of rationality."

Now, returning to the unfolding battle, both parties were selectively fueled. The air surrounding them was permeated with the enchantment of knowledge. Command had to be asserted, and thus the words became truth.

"What exists is inherently right," commented the man in white.

"As life bestows upon us a gift, we must embrace the entirety of our being. Every shape and size, color and shade, light and dark. We must acquaint ourselves with our true selves, unafraid to confront our authentic nature. Exploring the inner void unveils a realm of magic, where shadows coexist with light. Within this luminance, thoughts and perceptions arise from what is known and what is yet to be revealed within the framework of our existence. It illuminates the internal radiance that extends outward, fostering the celestial cause of the spirit. When the inner light of the spirit aligns with one's being, the spirit aligns with the cosmic wheel, and the wheel of creation harmonizes with the spirit. This spiritual force of thought can transport an individual to a realm where the essence of self encompasses the essence of all humanity. It is a power that flows through grace, seamlessly integrated into our lives. All it takes is an observant eye and a receptive ear," stated Daniel.

"To truly hear, one must listen through the ears of another, and to see, one must open their eyes to inner wisdom," responded Jar.

Now, you may wonder why these two wizards were aligned in their thinking. Well, the answer lies in the land of Rhine, where all endeavors converge to promote the grandest pursuit of the Idea.

The notion of society is indeed a grand idea, yet the idea of fostering a society centered around an idea surpasses it. This is why thoughts clash in battle, to demonstrate both discord and unity, and to champion the loftiest and noblest cause of the Idea. The Idea flows and operates as one, encompassing all, yet it is fueled by the collective efforts of men to harness the collective power of righteousness. The collective good does not always equate to the greatest good, and thus the good of the greatest is always emphasized in service of the grand cause of the Idea. And this Idea, it embodies the very essence of Society.

Now, the individuals within the society of Rhine were not always men of the society. Some sought their own means to establish a realm of thought to call their own. However, each house we inhabit becomes another sanctuary from the tempestuous storm of thoughts that incessantly whirl out of control. Though such storms cannot be quelled, the Eye of the Storm bestows a grace unknown to most men, yet once received, it is embraced by all. The individual whose thoughts find acceptance within their own house contributes to the society. However, the society of the individual is never fully perpetuated through time. This is why the order of Ideas operates as a continuous flow, growing from each individual whose thoughts are built upon the foundation of how society ought to be sustained.

This is the aspiration of all men: to attain power through knowledge and wield it to manifest the grandest Idea for humanity.

Yet the humans of the land of Rhine were never deterred by the path of knowledge. They understood the paramount good for all men and welcomed the magic that unfolded before them. Here, the magic endures."

"Now, what is life amidst the blight?" questioned an onlooker, a Vagard, from the midst of the crowd.

"It is to perceive oneself as a unity of blood, coursing through our bodies, to experience the many sensual interpretations," commented Jar.

"Allow me to add to that," sneered the white-clad wizard.

"Life is what it is. It resembles a roller coaster ride, with its ups and downs, twists and turns. Whatever unfolds, unfolds, and thus, we must strive to find harmony within our own bodies to feel complete and secure."

"To feel assured is to understand the inherent power within oneself, to harness one's potential, and convey it through thoughts, actions, deeds, and even mistakes. It is the natural path for all that has come to pass and all that is yet to come. Embrace the vitality of the present moment, for our present will shape the life we lead. To live one's life amidst the turmoil is to seek harmony with all fellow beings. That is the true blight: discovering peace amidst the struggles," proclaimed the white-clad wizard.

Driven by an insatiable quest for truth, the white-clad man delved deeper into the void, invoking a more profound spell.

"Life is about living, living in harmony and peace with all living beings. The life of inner Zen is the contemplative mind that seeks what has already been found within oneself. Why continue searching when the sought-after has already been discovered?" questioned Daniel.

"We must persist in our search for what has been lost, as what is lost must be found," chuckled the man dressed in red scarlet.

Daniel replied, "Indeed, but what is lost remains lost within the annals of time. Knowledge is ever-evolving, imprinted upon great individuals by an unknown Deity. Such is the true essence of spells—a spell cast upon mankind, prompting words to emerge. The remembrance of the past intertwines with the fabric of spells, threading through the tapestry of collective memory."

"If a spell is cast by a supreme being, does that not render the supreme being itself a spell?" questioned Jar.

"No, the supreme being encompasses all. It exists freely in the ethereal realm, transcending past, present, and future. It moves with divine grace, casting spells effortlessly to guide the course of the divine plane, infusing grace as a revelation. There is no time that is not the time of the being. The being embodies all magic contained within spirits—it is everything in unity. Yet, it possesses the power to juxtapose and become nothing; for in nothingness, everything exists, and in everything, nothing resides. Nothing signifies inner Zen, where the void of everything is discovered. However, while in pursuit of everything, nothing is found, for the search took the wrong direction—outward, rather than inward," proclaimed Daniel.

The answer was now revealed before the masses, urging them to discover their inner magic by simply heeding the inner voice. This voice has the power to sway nature or soothe a weeping child. The passage of time now flowed gracefully, whispering enchanting melodies that resonated with harmony.

In this tale, grace is synonymous with walking in one's own footsteps, for all magic originates from within oneself. Within each individual lies a structure of thoughts, the very essence of magic waiting to be explored. Wizards, with their innate nature, embark on this quest, further expanding the knowledge of time to unlock the potential of magic. All that is required is to master the art of spelling, as sorcery manifests through spoken words, vividly experienced within the mind's eye.

Returning to the wizards...

"The past encompasses moments of spiritual awakening," declared the red-clad wizard. "Death does not mark the end of our inner quest but the inception of a new reality. We shall exist in everything and perish in nothingness."

"Precisely," affirmed Daniel.

Having exchanged all that needed to be conveyed, the two wizards concluded their discussion. Daniel descended from the podium and retreated back into the castle fortress, while Jar withdrew into the modest audience, resuming his life of scarlet.

Chapter 3

Rooted now in complete sediment, the ushering of a new day commenced. This day, following the audience of yesterday, radiated with luminosity, championing the cause of Rhine. Once again, the nation's cause became an idea, emphasizing the pursuit of knowledge and the promotion of the Idea at the core of every individual.

As you have witnessed, magic emanates from the depths of the unknown. It arises from that which is yet to be known, gradually revealing itself. It emerges from the depths and shapes the structure of your beliefs. The castle's architecture served as a representation of mystical thoughts.

Meanwhile, in another time...

Seated at the table were twelve knights of the Gnarl. These men embodied the blue essence of Neptune, serving as knights rather than sorcerers. Their duty was to maintain order within society and consistently foster peace and harmony through the rule of law. This harmony permeated the land and was upheld through a balanced hierarchy, the divine rights of kings.

Although one knowledgeable man held the ruling position, all men of knowledge were rulers, as each opinion and idea deferred to higher authorities.

At that moment, the twelve knights gathered around the table engaged in a discussion about the day's politics when the white-clad man appeared, joining them to contribute to the conversation.

"What news reaches my ears? Tidings of profound tranquility and societal freedom?" inquired Daniel.

"Indeed, we were discussing how the men of Gnarl have experienced great peace and love, continuing to prosper with the motto 'all for one and one for all,'" replied Chris, the blue knight.

"Seems to be a fitting motto for this land," responded the wizard.

"Indeed, it is and shall remain so," quoted Jaredl, another blue knight.

Now, the knights gathered around the table were immersed in a contemplative state. They sought answers that had eluded them thus far. Their blue wisdom encompassed knowledge of the end, prophesying that blue always signifies truth and signifies nothingness. This propelled them to seek greater enlightenment, for their vision remained veiled in darkness, perceiving life in colors rather than shades. The following question stirred unrest within the realm of blue.

"We appear to be at a standstill, wizard," commented Chris. "Our understanding of the land is hindered by our forward focus; we cannot look backward when our attention is fixed on the future. We are entangled in magic games devoid of feeling but brimming with thoughts. What is the significance of this? How can we not see, but only have the will revealed to us through Visions?"

Deeply did this question sink into the void, as the crackling of magic filled the air, and the wizard stood as still as the Sphinx. The land of Rhine transformed into a movement of conscious energy.

"The sight of knowledge lies in the future of ages. One cannot perceive the past because one is the culmination of all past moments. Does not every passing moment of time create the moment that precedes it? You embody all the moments of time condensed into the energy of your existence. The future holds the key to comprehending the knowledge of the past, for what you see is what you are meant to be. And what you are meant to be encompasses all the moments of your past, while your past comprises the moments of your future. This is the truth, here and now," radiated the wizard named Daniel.

Silently, the men in blue remained seated.

Chapter 4

Deep within the land of Rhine stood a Tower of Darkness, unlike any other known to wizards. This tower, steeped in black magic, stood fortified to confine those who denied the truth. To deny the truth meant inviting death, a demise that marked the downfall of ignorance. Thus, the Tower became a realm of balance, embracing all that was forbidden. It forbade anyone from pursuing pure knowledge while succumbing to its malevolent path. To embrace an evil path in life was to condemn oneself to an eternity in hell. Hell was a creation of the senses, where unimaginable pain and potentiality were experienced within a subjective reality. Thus, the realm of doom came to be known as the black plague by the citizens of Rhine. Falling into ignorance meant closing oneself off from the broader lens of existence and being trapped within the Tower, forever dwelling in the shadow of one's own self.

Chapter 5

Today, the Wizard speaks.

"True power emanates from the realm of inner knowledge. The subjective understanding we attain encompasses the wisdom of countless ages, and the wisdom of ages embodies the true wellspring of power."

"All that we perceive and sense is a manifestation of our bodies interpreting the intricacies of an internal system. Without this system, we exist merely as souls, bound by no power other than our own. What belongs to us is but a fragment of the genuine essence of events, for all natural phenomena remain true to themselves."

"What we can behold is limited only by the gaze upon which our focus rests. If our gaze, objective to the true nature of reality, discerns what is and what could be. To see is to fixate upon the inner eye of knowledge, while to hear is to engage in dialogue with the inner voice of humanity."

"The void of life is akin to a dream roused within itself. We are the power that animates us each day. Our power assumes the form of feelings, the sensations that fuel our passions, and undergoes transformation through colors. The color we embody each day corresponds to what we perceive as common sense, an amalgamation of biases accrued with age."

Now, magic crackled and enshrouded the white wizard as he spoke, addressing the lands he hailed from in his incantation and relaying his vivid dreams that traversed the ethereal realm.

The essence of magic grew tangible, resonating through the atmosphere, while the atoms of time pulsed with a vibrant rhythm. All synchronized harmoniously with his thoughts.

"Thought, as humanity knows it, is the dwelling in which we abide. This dwelling comprises myriad beings and embodies the subjective nature that propels its course through time. It is rooted in chaos, the universal spirit of Gaia, and exists within the abode of every human. One can attune oneself to this realm of thought, and such thought can engender a magnificent mansion or a humble tepee in which to dwell. Each dwelling represents our own unique essence manifested in the passage of time. It draws nourishment from the forbidden fruit of knowledge and is shaped within every atom of our existence. All is but an amalgamation of what is, and one remains perpetually one throughout all existence; our thoughts encapsulate the totality of being expressed through the multitude of consciousness."

The air now carried a cool breeze infused with the vibrant force of thought. It radiated the reality of humankind, transforming into a conscious entity encompassing everything. Everything encompasses nothing, and nothing encompasses everything. The profound philosophy of the white sage shall be addressed in due course.

"Let us transcend our current state and become more than we are, yet less than what we have the potential to be. If we are but a thought, then we must embody the collective thought of all humanity. If we fall short of encompassing all human thoughts, we fall short of even being a mere thought. The power to exist as a thought is governed by the influence of our individual colors. Any color can exert control over a thought, yet all thoughts are of the same color. All is an expression of white across time, and all time is manifested through thought."

"Embrace the color of your own being and discover your essence through self-awareness. What you are stems from the ideas that have shaped your existence. To be or not to be, that is the essential question."

"To be is to live your life in the realization of your authentic self. Your authentic self signifies the beginning of your self-awareness, and your self-awareness represents your true Self."

"Every form embodies a fragment of everything. We perceive and interpret everything through our senses, associating colors with our intuitive faculties. This intuition forms the foundation of our senses, and what we perceive is the product of our own workings."

"We exist within the fabric of all existence, and the purpose of our existence is love. Love for ourselves and love for others constitutes the conscious gravitational force that intertwines all thoughts from a singular point. Every thought we have is an expression of time, connecting our essence to the ethereal realm. It permeates everything, freely flowing through the tapestry of existence, awakening the individual self and the unified self. The unified self embodies the true essence of our existence, interwoven throughout all that we are. What we are is what we ought to be, and what we ought to be is the realization of our authentic and contemplative self."

"The power of thought traverses a stream of conscious awareness in the awakened reality. This reality is the dream we live while perceiving the world around us. Once we transition from this existence, we soar into a subjective nature that thrives on our very existence."

As the wizard spoke, he noticed a magical presence imbued with the color yellow. Yellow represents the fiery essence of the sun and symbolizes the true nature of Apollo. The individuals adorned in yellow employed inquisitive inquiries to unlock the light. Through their empathic abilities, they sought answers that eluded their intellect. Their collective reality, steeped in yellow, remained under the influence of the sun, yet unbeknownst to them, belief gives rise to truth. This is the genuine embodiment of Apollo, radiating his resplendent light. Once again, the wizard spoke from the abyss.

"The abyss is none other than the authentic self that completes the oneness. It epitomizes the profound silence spanning ages, moving unhindered through reality by means of thought. The Sphinx represents the profound contemplation of countless eras, comprising diverse aspects of humanity and dwelling within the serenity of its own being. This creature embodies pure magical essence, continuously transforming itself from within. With the wings of an eagle, it soars freely across the annals of time. Ages never fade but are immortalized through the early endeavors of humanity. We need only observe to witness the convergence of the celestial and the contemplative. All celestial bodies are bound by the stars. Listen to the innermost echoes of your own being, radiating from the core of your existence."

Chapter 6

- "As follows are the statements of the wizard."

Nothing is something, something is everything, and everything is nothing; therefore, something must encompass both everything and nothing. These two concepts intertwine to shape the reality we perceive. Nothing, representing a state of order, is the origin from which we arise. Yet, as nothing encompasses everything, it also encompasses all that we are. Hence, as we are nothing, we are also everything. Both concepts encapsulate the entirety of our existence.

Therefore, nothing is everything, and something is also everything, wherein nothing itself is everything. Ultimately, within its own framework, nothing and everything coalesce into something.

Here concludes the wizard's statements.

Chapter 7

In the land of Rhine stood the white wizard, moving gracefully through times of trouble, flowing with his poetic grace and style. Here is an excerpt from his writings:

"To far and wide, close and near, to all the moments we hold dear, listen to the music pulse, beat, and flow, as if alive it plants seeds in rows."

Poetic style was the cornerstone of education in Rhine. From an early age, children were taught to write with their "right" hand. This ability became common speech among the people and paved the way for those skilled in the craft of language. The art of words was merely the first step toward becoming a wizard of colors, with each wizard's hue determined by how they wielded their words.

Words were the essence of existence. The reasoned voice of one was a genuine manifestation of the void. The primary goal of a wizard was to unite with the void, to contemplate thoughts of everything within nothingness. The void contained all true knowledge, as it represented nothing within Everything.

The wizard began addressing the masses:

"The void of life is the void of reason. It is the external magic that internally gives birth to a thought. It manifests sporadically and travels swifter than thought itself. It moves with rhythm and style, permeating the souls of men from the void. It governs the workings of thought and establishes control within our lives," proclaimed Daniel.

The magic of the void now pulsed and flowed from the wizard's knowledge, vibrating within the air around him. Enthralled, he continued his discourse:

"If nothing is something, then it must be everything. And if everything is nothing, then it must also be something. Everything surrounds us, existing within our complete system. It is intertwined with all that encompasses us, living through us in every moment. All moments we experience are encompassed within our existence. Nothing, therefore, thrives within the realm of everything. It embraces its Zen within the essence of its power and derives power from being everything. This is the ultimate philosophy, acknowledging that we are everything within nothing, and nothing within everything."

"Be unified with reality, like Brahma. Learn what is true to yourself and discern between the aspects that are genuine and those that stem from collective reality. For this reality is rooted in the greater consciousness. Align yourself with the reality embraced by the collective, avoiding the dichotomy of nature, for then your true nature shall remain intact. Live in harmony with your thoughts and find peace within your reality."

"To discover one's destiny, one must gaze into the void. Seek your voice of reason and discern the qualities that reside within you. These qualities infer the archetypes to which you belong, thereby illuminating the path toward realizing your potential. Knowing oneself and understanding one's essence is the initial step in unraveling the reality of your destiny. Sometimes, through thought alone, you may decipher the story of your life."

"Discipline your knowledge to be something of everything and everything of Something."
The wizard spoke boldly, continuing his pursuit of wisdom.

"Love is the gravitational force that acts upon our conscious and spiritual essence, unifying us from a point of preconception. It nourishes our inner self and connects us to the central power of everything. Being everything with another being is a source of unity that transcends conscious boundaries. This doorway is open to all who embrace love while connecting us through the force that simply exists. What exists is what we are, and what we are is an ongoing journey within reality. Embrace the realization that love is the true essence of self, for it holds the greatest power akin to the Greek gods. Love flows with the necessary energy that imbues each being to embrace their true selves, unhindered by limitations, and existing beyond the confines of reason. Reason may restrain, but love propels."

"Simplify your thoughts, for simplicity leads to clarity in explanation. To be able to articulate is to align oneself with the voice of reason. To unite with the void is to embrace simplicity."

"People expect from you what you expect from others. We yearn to live in harmonious coexistence as if we were all siblings. To find peace amidst challenges is the way in which we should all navigate life."

Once again, the air crackled with the enchanting power as Daniel addressed the masses. In this reality, his words were revered. Listen to his speech.

"Love emanates from within, reaching outward, a gentle caress that sets everything in motion. It is in the tenderness of a compassionate heart that true movement finds its beginning."

The white wizard was now deeply immersed in the spell of white magic. Its static and dynamic nature constantly stirred his soul. It surged with potent energy and constructive potential. It completed him, for his completeness stemmed from the power of nature expressed through a man, guided by the void of reason.

The purpose of the white prelate is to establish a brotherhood that transcends all boundaries of mankind. It encompasses a rainbow of diversity through its singular essence, being what it is because it simply is.

"The brotherhood of the void is united by the souls that have ventured beyond the boundaries of sanity into chaos. It harmonizes our conscious endeavors and fosters a state of knowledge that is comprehensive yet subjective to each individual. What we are embodies the potential of our condition. As our condition is predetermined, we can maximize it through embracing the Zen of Everything."

As the wizard pondered and delved into introspection, his thoughts reached out to the masses, calling upon the void to usher in a new understanding.

"Justice represents the culmination of knowledge. It encompasses all that is virtuous and propels the trajectory of reason towards elevated realms within the individual self. White embodies virtue."

"Vice is an unjust state where the reasoning of self deteriorates beneath societal norms. It succumbs to the manifestation of evil, entwining the self with a corrupted black hue. Black embodies Vice."

"Memory is influenced by receptive and inceptive tendencies. Receptive memory pertains to our ability to respond and recall information. Inceptive memory, on the other hand, arises from deep contemplation and introspection."

Now, the masses comprehended that the challenge for a wizard lies in aligning what is congruent with the void and with all humanity. This alignment fuels the imagination and enables the wizard to thrive.

"Each individual embodies the potential of their own notions. The true self is attained through the power that can be accessed via the void of reason. Uncovering and expressing one's true self involves the natural selection of the soul. The soul represents the potential to attain a comprehensive state of knowledge. This harmony is achieved through unity and constitutes the true magic of the realm."

"Your soul encapsulates the essence of your thoughts' potential. You are only confined by the limits of nature, wherein the expression of your soul is externally manifested in all facets of reality."

The soul of the white wizard emanated an essence of Yoga, deeply intertwined with the Vedas. This perception of self persisted through time.

"Time is universal, for it serves as the seed of all existence. It propels everything in a progression from a three-dimensional focal point and reveals what we perceive as we experience it. This movement of particles resembles gravity, as Archimedes stated, 'One point should be fixed and immovable.'"

"Trust in your potential until your genius leads you towards enlightenment."

"We are all slumbering within the dream that must be awakened. Awakening lies dormant during the slumbers of our lives, yet can be stirred to life through the renewal of the spirit in samsara."

"In reality, we are nothing; our senses merely govern the body. And in nothingness, we encompass everything—an existence unrestrained by the physical form. Yet, as nothingness holds somethingness, we must embody the complete essence of who I am."

"Man is an extension of complete knowledge or self—a presence that resides in everything within a state of nothingness."

"The ability to think is the manifestation of the void of reason—a state of nothingness where the thoughts of everything persist. The thought of self endures throughout time, merely changing form."

"God embodies the essence of everything and the essence of nothingness."

"Nothingness cannot be abstracted from nature without obliterating it."

Dharma has birthed the wizard from the seeds of time, as white magic flows within the realm of oneness. It whirls endlessly on the wheel of change.

"A state of nothingness denotes the absence of subject-object relationships."

"Only time, space, and causation exist as boundless objects within reality."

"A state of everything is achieved when our subject-object relationships harmonize with our very being."

"The purpose of life is to discover the divine essence within oneself and in others."

"The state of the soul cannot be detached from the complete state of existence."

"Who can question the dominion of a wizard?"

As the wizard continued to ride the waves of the void, the white magic coursed through his veins, aligning him with the unparalleled wisdom of the Vedas...

"Imagination encompasses the thoughts of everything."

"All conditions converge towards the complete embodiment of virtue, as each condition is an expression of virtue and justice."

"A state of complete knowledge is synonymous with supreme law. The supreme law is to love your God with all your heart, soul, and mind."

"Pleasure is a pursuit, not an end; true pleasure can only be found in the Zen of nothingness."

"The good fruits of the spirit yield the potential of the soul. These virtues, when upheld with integrity, grant pleasure and goodness through the principle of cause and effect."

"Evil manifests through negative actions such as theft, falsehood, envy, and hatred, degrading the ability to realize one's full potential."

Now the land fell into silence during these prolonged hours as the wizard named Daniel spoke his magic, emanating from the white void. Reason and emotional subjectivity became one with the Vedas, possessing the power to be as they may.

"Man, in this particular form, is nothing compared to the all-encompassing divinity that surrounds us."

"Atman is the self-control of oneself."

"As the mind, body, and soul intertwine, all can be divided through the separation of atoms."

"Insight is the remembrance of knowledge derived from the complete state. This remembrance occurs through the passage of time and introspection."

"The state of complete knowledge can assume various forms and sizes, yet it always resonates with the same essence. The knowledge we find within ourselves can either inhibit or diminish our lives."

"One's complete state of knowledge implies that nothing is superior to oneself."

"Knowledge brings about equality."

The wizard remained enveloped in a radiant white glow as the magic continued to flow, leaving the audience in awe, longing for further enlightenment from the void.

"The potentialities of human beings stem from what stimulates our thoughts and senses to the greatest extent. When we grasp the knowledge of self, our senses fully unleash their potential within our condition."

"Knowledge is neither created nor destroyed; it simply exists in all its forms."

"All knowledge resides within; one must delve into the depths of their soul's nothingness to unearth the knowledge of everything."

"Through contemplation, we expand our search within nothingness, retrieving what we seek."

"The state of knowledge remains constant, even as our condition undergoes perpetual change."

"To attain purity, one must exist in a state of nothingness."

"As the mind encompasses the body and the body encompasses the soul, so does the mind embody the soul of the body. Therefore, when we undergo transformation, we relinquish the conscious state of our physical form and transition into the spirit of our soul."

"The harmonious unity of the soul nurtures serenity and cultivates the thoughts of the mind."

"We are the force that acts upon ourselves, a conscious gravity that draws us inward toward the illuminating realm of introspection."

As the magical energy continued to flow, the words resonated with echoes of the past.

"The soul is akin to a thread woven into the fabric of timeless existence. These threads of progression may assume diverse conditional states, yet they harmonize with the state of oneness, which embodies complete knowledge. Each manifestation of the soul takes on various forms but remains a singular and complete entity."

"A soul can never be created nor destroyed; it is a condition of being that undergoes transformation and possesses immortality."

The wizard's ideas took shape.

"Nothingness cannot be annihilated; it merely undergoes metamorphosis, just like the soul, which transcends impermanence while also experiencing transformations."

"Poetry is the art of utilizing words to express thoughts stemming from the state of complete knowledge."

"Sphere poetry embodies the essence of the spirit."

With that, the wizard concluded the recitation of ancient verses.

Chapter 8

Once again, the wizard addresses the masses.

"Ego breeds ignorance, while self leads to knowledge."

"Trial and error precede the countenance of the soul."

"The dualities of life, such as virtue and vice, embody the two sides of the same coin. Likewise, there exists good and evil, beauty and ugliness, pleasure and pain."

"We are an integral part of nature, expressing our souls through the thoughts of our minds. We encompass both what lies within us and what surrounds us. The mind reflects the state of the body, while the soul reflects the state of the mind. Embrace the natural course of the soul, for we are interconnected with the elements of time."

"All manifestations are mere reflections of the self, the true oracle of our existence."

Deep in the depths of contemplation, the wizard discerned what was and what was not.

"Be a blooming flower that merges with the tranquil lake of your soul. Just as vegetation flourishes around the lake, so do animals follow suit."

"In the realm of samsara, the boundary of your soul is but the edge of nothingness. It is the dream of everything extending beyond."

"Fulfill the expectations of your soul, which aligns itself with virtue."

"A man of voice is a man of nothing; the embodiment of everything within the soul's domain."

In the depths of contemplation, the masses fixated on the bestowed knowledge. Flowing from the realm of the void, this knowledge resonated with reality and sustained the ongoing thoughts of many. Thus, the wizard continues.

"Be the inspiration of dreams and be the dream of others. Those who yearn for truth embrace the responsibility of the universe. The dreamers are the true dreamers."

"The narrative of art cannot be conveyed without experience."

"Knowledge is the perception of the complete state of existence."

"Man encapsulates the essence of everything while simultaneously being nothing within the vastness of our being."

"Perception encompasses everything."

"Everything is in motion from the point where nothingness prevailed. This point signifies the potential for all knowledge that can be obtained from nothingness. We are all consciously connected to this point."

As thoughts delved deeper into the minds of the masses.

"Nothingness lacks self-existence within everything."

"We perceive the world through colors, and our emotions give life to the hues, translating them into thoughts manifested in action."

"In the state of nothingness, we have the capacity to develop positive virtues or negative vices."

"As everything emerges, nothingness dissipates."

Chapter 9

Now, magic in the Rhine was governed by the ebb and flow of the unknown. Its essence resided in nothingness, giving rise to the illumination that engendered thoughts of everything. Within each man lies a void that parallels the void of existence. This wellspring of magic elucidates how thoughts intertwine among individuals, as two minds become greater than one.

Today, the wizard engages in conversation with those adorned in the color green. Green symbolizes the natural path of life and embodies the serene nothingness that advocates the middle way. This fount of magic shall now intertwine with reality.

Farce, the man named, inquired, "We are acquainted with the philosophies of existence and the ways of natural order, but what about the simple qualities like smiles, friendship, and life?"

"Well, let us embark on our contemplation," complied the man dressed in white.

"A smile is the eternal companion of our lives. It is a simple state that transcends consciousness. A universal expression that reveals facets of one's soul. It showcases the level of contentment one finds within the earthly realm of existence."

"So, a smile is both simple and the most profound gesture of being?"

"Indeed," affirmed Daniel.

"Now, what about friendship? Does it not pertain to brotherhood? What is the magical aspect that binds souls like grains of sand?" pondered the Green.

"First, we must distinguish between mortal and immortal friendships. One is about acquaintanceship, while the other pertains to encounters. Some friends may enrich your introspective soul, while others merely adhere to its surface. You can discern the disparity in the bond of soulful love. Vitality serves as the seed of all friendships."

"A friend is never a predetermined or contractual relationship; it is an unconscious connection. It defies expression, for words are mere gossip. A true friend brings happiness through the shared experience of interaction. The purest friendship embodies the divine qualities of humanity.

Friends cannot be confined to a specific circumstance. The melody of friendship is akin to music that purifies the air with electric harmony," quoted the Sage.

"So, a man who upholds truth shall be loved and not subjected to scrutiny," questioned Green .

"The man who upholds truth carries nothing," declared the Rainbow.

"Now, what is life?" queried Emerald.

"Life is a radius that perpetually expands. The boundaries of your life can always be broadened through the realm of nothingness. It possesses the potential for conquest or defeat. One always carries the limits of life within."

Thus concludes the magic.

Chapter 10

Now, magic found its abode within the Self, heralding the advent of new thoughts. Today, the wizard addresses the masses in diverse tongues.

"We exist as disordered beings, striving for greater order. With the passage of time, all converges towards totality, moving closer to unity with the state of everything. In this convergence, reality transforms into nothingness."

"Humans do not reside in a realm of justice like the gods, but in a realm of love."

"Virtue is the magnification of nature. All elements of nature, even the tiniest ant, possess greatness. The worth lies in what is."

"Life is a medium founded upon contentment. The closer one is to the realm of nothingness within their soul, the nearer they are to a virtuous, natural happiness devoid of destiny, for it is nothingness. Health is solely the happiness of all mediums. Life, in mortal slumber, is immortal. A spiritual experience manifests within the human form. One can embody the essence of existence by encompassing all."

"One is all, and all is one..."

The remnants of past magic lingered within the atoms.

All life comprises four sacred realms:

Love
Religion
Poetry
Friendship

Each shapes the soul and gives voice to its essence. The soul embodies the core of nothingness and the boundless potential of Everything."

"Values of objectivity emerge from what has transpired."

An orb of white magic hovered in the midst of warmth. In its enigmatic reality, it floated freely, oscillating between here and there, embracing fullness. Its essence merged with the spirit and fused its natural vigor with that of the wizard. Thus, the tale deepens.

"Life is not the shadow of death; it is surreal on the path of enlightenment."

"There is no moral law, only the law of physical existence."

"What the world requires is less suspicion of what is not, for contempt breeds solely in its shadows. True reality remains obscured. Objects hold immense value when founded upon the faculty of imagination."

The magic orb now ceased its motion.

Chapter 11

This is the paramount question of the Rhine: What is religion? The Eastern religion is composed of contemplative individuals, while the Western religion is rooted in morality and the preservation of love. But what if these two intertwine? The religion of the Rhine is founded upon the void of nothingness.

Nothingness, or pure bliss, is attained through the Dao (law) and encompasses the path of all individuals. Each person is a celestial realm within themselves and can achieve Brahman through the state of nothingness. This state harmonizes with everything, and the Vedas imbue it with power, as it shall be.

In the Rhine, there is only one law: "Do as thou wilt and harm no one." This is the fundamental law that underpins all existence.

"The one who strives for the greatest means achieves nothing, yet nothingness achieves the greatest means. In nothingness, wisdom is discovered, and everything is encompassed."

Life does not find complete agreement with everything; there lies no argument in between

.

The religion of nothingness entails living a natural life rooted in love. This love is expressed through the void and guides all individuals toward their true essence. Embracing one's true self leads to the bliss of heaven while on Earth, surpassing the rewards promised in the afterlife. By worshipping the essence of everything, one worships the entirety of life.

Through worshipping everything, one becomes nothingness of the soul, and clear thoughts are mirrored upon the lake. Become a radiant whole of your soul.

"For the one who practices the nothingness of their soul shall discover it."

The wizard in white comprehends that every movement in nature is the grand movement of the One. The movement of the One is the movement of all nature. All life is nature sustained by virtue. Virtue represents the state of unity (infinity) aligned with time. The intended nature of a child was to be unified with virtue. Only humans possess vice. To be one with nature is to be one with the divine essence of life. The laws of nature serve as a moral code for the enlightened mind, based on interdependence.

As life is inherently unnatural, the only path is to be natural. From disorder to order. Who truly comprehends the course of a natural life?

The religion of nature encompasses the cause and effect of everything. The pursuits and characteristics of all individuals can be found in nature, yet they arise from within the depths of the soul's nothingness.

"If one remains true to nature, pursuits and pleasures shall flow effortlessly. Nature is natural and remains natural to itself."

Individuals are not united in friendship within religion. The unity of a whole necessitates the negation of one's sense of perfect integrity, striving instead for perfect unity. No religion is purely divine, as the human stain persists.

"All laws are subject to many until all laws become the subject of more."

"Nature possesses laws to heal all aspects of nature, yet nature must heal itself through its own laws."

The primary objective of the Rhine religion is to perceive the miracles of God in everything. One blesses the creator yet depreciates all that represents Him. Such is the essence of all religions.

Chapter 12

Magic pulsates, beats, upholds the static glow of the wizard. Time, uncontested in its essence, now compels him to speak again, confessing.

"Any life experience is through a foreign subject, belonging to the life of the experienced Subject."

"A dream is a tale of truth. It emerges from a state of nothingness. A dream state is a state of oneness. Dreams are based on your compass setting; your compass can either delve into its roots or reach upwards to the cosmos."

The radiant wizard glow emanated from life's photons.

"All objectivity is subject to the subjectivity of the subject."

"Discovery is the search for the connection between humanity and nature."

"Each animal represents a hue of its nature. For nature is a myriad of colors, yet unified as one."

This is the essence of magic as it emerges from the void. The thoughtful wizard opened himself to the masses.

"A pure soul may lack discernment, for wisdom is an endless restoration of a higher order of existence. Yet all limitations find freedom through an order of higher being."

"A higher order encompasses illusion, spirit, and intellect."

"Keep your soul pure. A poisoned truth decays the core. Parallel truths lack no order."

"One must align with existence through righteousness, while wrongdoing echoes the voice of desire."

"The most tender love is eternal."

The wizard now recited the ancient chant.

"If ideas hold concrete value in life, they become true in the sense of virtue and well-being. Truth depends on the correlations of other truths. The fulfillment and harmony of truth lead to an understanding of self's well-being."

"Evolution is the process of a structure becoming more intricate within carbon."

"Motion is incessant, giving rise to transformations."

"We are nothing more than our original state of nothingness."

The wizard stood tall, fueled by magic coursing through his veins. The masses were prepared for a lengthy discourse, yet all was contained within the self.

"As the self originates in a monism of nothingness, it evolves into an all-encompassing knowledgeable existence, transitioning from a monotheistic view to a dualistic perspective."

"The evolution of self takes shape from everything and adheres to the state of nothingness."

"Life is a disorder emerging from order."

"Disorder creates order, while order engenders disorder. Such is the nature of existence."

"Life experiences encompass everything, the potential of all that is becoming. Everything is an ultimate reality."

"Life is an immediate sensation."

"Connections to reality foster the unconscious flow of the void, thus ensuring the continuity of experience."

"All forms encapsulate one form and develop through the infinite. They embody all that is potentially possible."

The discourse between nature had transpired, and the wizard felt the energy of nations coursing through his veins.

"The vision of everything is a matter of perspective."

"The tiniest speck of dust affects everything in motion."

"Transaction is the flow of energy between nature and nature."

The wizard's speech burned with intense fervor. As the echoes of the distant past lingered in the air, spirits permeated every particle of the wizard's being, allowing the voice of reason to reach the masses. Interaction was complete and undergoing transformations. Here is the continuation.

The wizard's logical approach was his ability to perceive everything in nature.

"Every individual embodies a unique potential within the complete state of existence."

"Experience encompasses everything and holds the meaning of everything as potential, reacting from the Void."

"Doubt is a state where beliefs remain unsatisfied, yet a belief can be transformed into any form."

"Create a belief or creed, and you shall be as you will."

"Everything exists as a priori method leading to the nothingness of the void. It exists as it shall, so it shall exist as it may."

"Question everything and know nothing."

"Was it all born from a golden egg?"

The wizard now undergoes a color change as the white of the rainbow transfuses. And as the colors shift, so does the speech. Let us discuss the way of life.

"The poorest man is the richest fool, yet the richest fool is the poorest man."

"The poorest man who follows the Dao adheres to the rule of conduct set by heaven. Each person, in their time, is a beneficiary of the spirits. Man can align with heaven through virtuous actions that solely satisfy goodness."

"One must always follow reason."

"Kingdoms experience disorder due to the reality of the Dao. The more ordered, the lesser the disorder, as one complements the creation of the other."

"Taking life in any form generates disorder and thus goes against the order of the Dao."

"Time fosters greater order as disorder diminishes. Therefore, the creation of negative nature decreases due to the lack of disorder, while a more positive spiritual nature arises from order."

The wizard is in a contemplative mood today. The masses eagerly await his teachings, so let us continue.

"When one is disordered, it is easy to relate to order; when one is ordered, the desire for disorder arises. Those who feel the need for disorder are prone to disaster, while those who strive for order find enlightenment."

"The more one distances oneself from order, the more disorder emerges."

"What is, as it is, from now on."

"To be one with heaven is to be one with order."

"The non-action of order promotes the well-being of the spiritual being."

"Just as a tree possesses a thousand branches, so does the potential for self's order. Yet, one can be set ablaze and wither from disorder."

"Renounce all, and one will find order."

The wizard now delves deep into the ascension of the Dao. His interactions with the masses create a collective force of energy that aligns with the way things are. The masses are unaware of this symphony, but it resonates through the voice of the white wizard. The heat continues.

"Disorder is the Yang of light, and order is the Yin of darkness."

"The disorder of life is merely the suppression of order, as it may be."

"One is Yin in order and Yang in disorder."

"To be one with disorder means to be one with the spiritual realm of the deceased, hence demons arise from the equilibrium of completion. Yet, in a state of order, one perceives angels, as the balance of nature must feel complete."

"Honesty and peace are the harmonies of order and disorder, completing what may be total."

"The further one strays from the grounded root of self, the more one senses the lack of harmony. If one reaches upward like a tree toward the cosmos, they will encounter difficulties in searching for their own roots. However, if one remains confined to their roots, they will never reach the sky. Life is the roots of humanity."

If one disregards the natural progression of order through disorder, discontent will persist in their life.

All disorder is an act against heaven, yet it exists as part of the equilibrium of heaven.

All acts of heaven through disorder are merely the gods' response to the absence of natural order.

A state of completion marks the beginning of all order.

To return to the roots of nothing, one remains unchanged, but by reaching out to the branches of everything, one becomes manifold.

Men have distanced themselves from their roots and evolved into the multitude of branches. Order can only establish itself within disorder through words.

Yin and Yang represent the balance that harmonizes everything.

Heaven and earth are always in order, maintaining a state of nothingness.

A state of order corresponds to transcendence.

Disorder and order are interconnected. The heavens of order perpetuate themselves through cycles of disorder. However, as we become more ordered, the instances of disorder will diminish.

Transmission and reconciliation between the void and the wizard were in complete unity. One receives as they will.

Chapter 13

The wizard speaks to the masses.

Order always heals disorder, and a state of nothingness heals everything.

Light always shines over darkness, yet darkness may engulf the entirety. Be a light that outshines the radiance of your soul.

The wizard's contemplative train of thought was now directed towards the ultimate goal of unity. All power that was, is all power that is. Let us begin anew!

The potential culmination that one may achieve in their life fosters the Dharma of the underworld, or the alignment with this world. Such actions promote Karma in the pursuit of excellence and destiny.

The realm of the void, of nothingness, expands thoughts on the potential of the soul. It evolves into form and takes shape as everything in disorder.

A state of nothingness is the unity from which the cosmos originates.

To prematurely end someone's life before they have attained a state of order is to disrupt the natural cycle of the Earth. The disorder and disharmony caused by the Dao are thus perpetuated by the essence of nature. When one is prematurely killed, the ability for Dharma is restricted, and they are judged in the afterlife by their actions. In Rhine, we only subject one to penalties, never death.

Disorder alone can create the happiness of order, while order creates the longing for disorder. The wizard now spoke with a sense of despair. How could these philosophical words be conveyed to all through mere language? The utterances of spirits were insufficient to quell the questioning state of the wizard's mind. But as the story unfolds...

If men are in disorder, so shall you be. If men are in order, you shall be as you will. The potential of each individual is bestowed upon their kind. A nurse is a nurse, a cobbler a cobbler, therefore, shine forth.

Disorder arises from doubt, yet it dissipates with time and reason.

Hence, the prelude contains speech.

Luck can be calculated by the probability of Bohr's model deficiency. It is time multiplied by disorder, equal to the speed of light. This will predict the outcome of our atoms and our species.

Yang is the substance of everything, while Yin is the order of nothingness.

When everything is attained, there is a return to nothingness.

When one is in a state of everything, the spirits do not fill the void.

Vice, the Yang, is found in everything. Virtue, the Yin, is found in the nothingness of nothingness. Yet one can become everything through the nothingness of their soul.

Disorder encompasses a part of heaven and the entirety of earth. Order contains the same.

Do not neglect the proper order, for then one will experience disorder. Feel the nothingness of existence permeating through the core of everything.

Disorder of earth causes illness in man. Order or nothingness revitalizes the spirit.

The greater the order of earth within the spectrum of everything, the greater the harmony between heaven and earth.

The order of heaven constantly watches over the disorder of earth.

The less disorder there is in one's life, the closer one feels to the order of heaven.

To maintain control over oneself is the natural process of order.

The wizard's speech was now filled with a sense of trepidation, as the spirits willed and maneuvered. Such was the harmony of life. Let us continue.

Order is truth, disorder is falsehood. Falsehood leads to greater disorder in everything, while truth leads to the Zen of nothingness in the order of heaven.

*The great order consists, firstly, of heaven; secondly, of earth; and thirdly, of man

One can only attain the order of heaven through the nothingness of the soul, then all the disorderly elements shall find peace as they may.

The order of heaven is eternally present in everything, for a word encompasses everything and arises from nothingness. Thus, all words of everything are false, while a silent soul of nothingness is truly virtuous.

Upwards is divine. Those who constantly question are more inclined towards the downward path. To accept is to ascend.

Nothing is greater than reason, as heaven is a complete state of order.

When man is in a state of order, all disorder harmonizes with him. When man is in a state of disorder, heaven aligns itself with him.

Heaven commands unity with all disorder, and through order, all becomes one.

We must first learn to cooperate with the order of heaven before the radiance of the soul's nothingness shines. Yet, one may work with the evil spirits of order and promote negative vices, as heaven and hell represent the complete balance of order.

Order is inherent in all beings and can be sustained through the nothingness of the soul. Practice validates righteousness.

The wizard's lengthy speech was fitting for the era and ages. Time, with its recycled patterns of recollection, flowed back and forth. Only then does order find relevance. Let us continue the journey.

Disorder arises from those who lack order.

Those who embrace order gradually align themselves with the truth that is essential to their potential. Those engulfed in disorder fluctuate in both directions.

True virtue is infinite, like God, like order, like nothingness.

A person of Dao is a person of order.

As disorder is proportional to order, such spirits aid those who lack, and those without need help others. One is always positive in disorder and negative in order. These cycles are the Yin and Yang of virtue and vice. Dream demons ensnaring virtuous souls, while benevolent spirits watch over the souls of vice.

By following the model of the order of nothingness, the doorway to the Dao remains open, creating the flow of events.

The wizard paused to absorb the collective energy. The sensations of everything around him were drawn into the void, expanded and heightened, fueling his continued speech.

To live a life of order and transcendence is to renounce all but the nothingness of the void. Once complete, everything will naturally flow in an ordered state of nothingness. This medium aligns the reality around one with the potential existence of thought. Only then, in nothingness, will one realize the true potential of self.

Today's heaven resides in the soil of great disorder, as the equilibrium upon the earth disrupts the natural harmonies.

Order is for everyone, and it is everyone's responsibility.

In disordered activities, demons thrive; in ordered activities, angels soar.

The way of heaven is through the Dao. The way of earth is through virtue. The savior of self is Christ, and divine grace is from the Lord.

If one lacks order, they are disorder; if one lacks disorder, they are order. Such is the equilibrium of sums.

The void of reason subsided, thus concluding the speech of the day.

Chapter 14

Today, the wizard of white spoke outwardly, carried along on a trolley. He had to be as it is, as it may. Thus, the journey of his speech has commenced.

The mind is not made of clay, but of an immortal essence that shines as bright as a ray, forever replenishing the void.

Knowledge's recollection shapes its future based on the ideas of the past.

Morality emerges from the conscious experience, a state of greater order or disorder.

Morality is in motion when the truth of alternating choices measures the perception of life objectively. Thus, it becomes profoundly expansive.

There is no morality, only virtue and vice in the Rhine.

Morality has evolved from situations involving conflicting personal goals. Setting goals for order makes morality natural, just as in nothingness. Setting goals for disorder makes morality unnatural and unpromising.

Morality cannot be deduced from pleasure or pain; it can only be discerned through the lens of order or disorder, establishing a cognitive relationship.

Live your life in the morality of nothingness, for then everything falls into proper order. Pleasure and pain are merely aspects of asceticism.

Act upon order as if it were the universal law that should be followed.

A moral is merely a hypothesis regarding the nature of virtue.

The morals of Rhine naturally resonated with its people, as they lived as an expression of nature within the vastness of the cosmos. Thus concludes the discussion.

Chapter 15

Now, one may wonder after all this heresy, what a wizard truly is. A wizard is a sage-like individual who resides in a state of nothingness. They have been reborn into reality through natural knowledge and transcend the boundaries of the mind to connect with the spirit. They wield the complete power of nature and the wisdom of the Vedas.

And so, the speech begins.

Experience encompasses the entirety of the cosmos, forming an organic and absolute whole. The essence of the absolute is boundless, unrestrained by any limitations.

A transcendental wizard is created in the image of God, possessing power as it may, as it shall. God is unknowable as nothingness but knowable through everything within nature.

A universal doctrine finds acceptance only when supported by the voice of reason, emerging from the state of order born out of nothingness.

Solitude defines the soul of nothingness and brings forth the harmonies of order.

Religion is composed of reactions, shaped by the quality of human experiences within the vastness of everything, encompassing the orders of beings who were once nothingness. Do not obey the law, but rather, the law that has been revealed.

Everything reaches us through the realm of imagination.

All ideals are like spokes connecting to the hub of nothingness, expressed in various forms. Natural and human forces foster the ideal of a collective utopia.

The wizard is defined by the collective properties of nature and moves in unison with the magic that envelops them. It is not man's adherence to religion, but rather man's essence intertwined with religion. It is what one binds themselves to and the aspirations that drive them. To be complete and whole in a state of nothingness, attuned to the boundless energy that surrounds us.

Chapter 16

Beginning first to understand the land of Rhine, we must delve into its educational system. The ancient prevalence of poetry to redefine the voice of reason and gymnastics to harness potential energy was a structured force within Rhine. However, each color (order) had its own system, so let us adopt a broader perspective and examine the whole.

The primary objective of education was to maximize the potential of one's being through an educational approach that delves into the depths of the soul and comprehends the entirety. It encompassed the essential skills of mathematics, language, social dynamics, serenity, and health, while also specializing in areas unique to each individual, allowing them to realize their motion's potential. Daily meditation practice was also incorporated to facilitate a deeper understanding of one's own soul.

Education must transmit the goals, theorems, and beliefs of all individuals to the students. These elements are influenced by the geographical location and the essence of the land. Education should build upon foundational knowledge and foster the development of potential. Education should have the flexibility to aid in comprehending the constant nature of change. It should adhere to educational guidelines while simultaneously allowing the freedom for diverse classes to explore the world through educational means.

In Rhine, education operates with the goal of maximizing a student's potential. Teachers are trained with a discerning eye and are able to identify motivation, elicit responses, nurture discoveries, and develop theories of perception. These essential qualities are employed to identify those with greater potential or those more willing to express their potential. Once identified, the search is expanded upon. Education in Rhine nurtures the authenticity of creative vision and pushes the boundaries of imagination. The early years of a child's life hold the key to unlocking their future.

Each mode of analysis in Rhine consists of establishing connections and relationships through the methods of inquiry and evaluation.

This is not a case of the blind leading the blind.

The purpose of education is to promote the intellectual ideal of one's potential voice. It is how thou wilt, thus, how art should be.

The foundation of intellectual discovery lies in the child's exploration of themselves, the void of nothingness, and their interaction with the endless possibilities within their subjective experiences. Profound thought is scientific until proven otherwise. Yet, unscientific thought can also possess depth and must be acknowledged for what it is.

The ultimate goal is to liberate the mind, recognize the potential that lies within, and embrace complete nothingness through the voice of reason. What pure thoughts may a child possess? The highest echelons of education in Rhine insist on instilling virtues within all individuals, to acknowledge the nothingness within and stand upright in harmony with nature. Nothing less than the embodiment of complete character.

Education in Rhine aligns the interests of potential success with the pursuit of happiness. Memories of the past and hopes for the future serve as the motto for all education. Education in Rhine is dedicated to individual growth, with each individual growing into the collective whole.

And thus, concludes the discussion on education.

Chapter 17

The wizard wills as the spirits wheel, so let us embark on a passage from days of yore.

“The eye is the vessel of truth. It beholds the entirety of light and revels in its imagery within the recesses of the mind. Trust the man who has truly seen.”

“Truth resides in the essence of life, thus the force of life surpasses truth when it comes to the self as the active force.”

“One may obtain if one seeks, for those who seek may be the ones who receive.”

“A man who attains completeness through the order of nothing becomes pure, pristine, and liberated from decay and death.”

“Take the straight path, for it encompasses all routes.”

“The mind is indeed the abode; we are the thoughts in which we dwell.”

“One must always be whole, for otherwise, we are merely synapses.”

“The tongue is the wealthiest, the eye perceives all, the ear hears, and through all these faculties, we achieve success.”

“Each new day unveils a fresh countenance, rekindling the potential that had waned.”

“The person of myriad colors is the individual of a pure void.”

“Speech and breath serve as catalysts for everything. Silence and the absence of breath signify unspoken nothingness.”

“Always offer a hymn of praise, for therein lies its fulfillment.”

And so concludes the wheel of spirits.

Chapter 18

Now the magic of the wizard utters in enigmas.

“In the genesis of chaos, the apple ushered forth greater disorder. Now, God resides alongside angels, awaiting the advent of order. This light serves as our guiding motto; be patient, for the day draws near, though it may seem distant.”

One cannot unravel that which lies beyond their sight. Thus, the wizard's dreams reveal profound wisdom and comprehension of reality. It exists as it is destined to be. The riddle of the wizard resounds once more.

Chapter 19

Deep within the realm of Rhine dwelled a man cloaked in the color purple. Purple denoted fortification of the mind and the cultivation of a natural language. This man, named Job, convened with the wizard adorned in white to explore the essence of unity. Thus unfolds the tale.

The purple inquired, "What is the path of truth?"

The white asserted, "The true self is the rebirth of wholeness. It is the self, and thou art it."

The purple mused, "In every direction, I perceive that I am I."

At that moment, magic surged, radiating from the seed of fruits.

The white expounded, "A tree sprouts from a seed, and a seed emerges from nothingness. Such is the essence of existence."

The purple acknowledged, "Then a tree embodies the true nature of self."

The rainbow interjected, "The tree's branches ascend to the heavens and delve deep into the earth. This mirrors the essence of human life. An individual in complete harmony comprehends true wisdom."

The purple responded, "A person is liberated by their true self, akin to the deliverance of purity." However, the flow of magic transformed as the discourse continued.

The purple queried, "What purpose does a name serve?"

The white responded, "Speech is the craft that precedes knowledge and follows all that exists. Speech enables us to discern vice from virtue. In the beginning was the word, and that word engendered all things from chaos."

Curiously, the purple named Job asked, "What surpasses speech?"

The white replied, "The mind surpasses speech, for it creates words and compels the becoming of what is to be."

Job pondered aloud, "Yet what surpasses the mind?"

The wizard Daniel mused, "Will surpasses the mind, for it governs self-action and allows one's potential to be realized."

With the course of magic guided by will, Job inquired further, "Now, what surpasses will?" Daniel explained, "Consideration surpasses will, as it harnesses the power of inherent goodness in nature. A person who embodies consideration within their soul of nothingness compels the natural order of the land."

Undeterred, the purple pressed on, "But above all this, what surpasses consideration?" The white opined, "Reflection surpasses consideration, for it is the serenity of your visible lake. Through reflection, one comprehends thought."

Job contemplated, "Be that as it may, what surpasses reflection?"

Daniel declared, "Understanding surpasses all, as it serves as the key to unraveling the foundations of human nature. Within knowledge lies understanding."

Thus concludes the mystical dialogues.

Chapter 20

Today, the wizard summons his magic to resonate with the masses; thus it begins.

“Through perception, one comprehends, and by believing in our perceptions, we understand.”

“One who attains the emptiness of their soul acts in accordance with order towards everything.”

“When one exists in nothingness through sight, hearing, and taste, then one becomes infinite.”

“Infinite transcends all measures.”

“The self encompasses all that exists.”

“He who sees all comprehends all and attains everything, everywhere.”

“True freedom of self in all realms is achieved through the realization of everything and propelled by a state of nothingness.”

“Abstinence from all is the purest manifestation of nothingness.”

“He who comprehends everything shall receive everything.”

“He who freely traverses dreams has attained everything in a state of nothingness.”

“He who enters the void of nothingness perceives all.”

“One of the souls represents the universal, unchanging potential of all beings. The sufferings in this life merely serve as an opportunity to transcend the ordinary and unify with the self. The self is enlightened through the nothingness of everything, thus achieving union with the divine.”

“The birth of life leads to death, and the death of life leads to rebirth.”

“The soul can be purified of its individuality through the absence of desire.”

“Everyone is predetermined by their inherent nature; such is the law of life.”

“I am the doer, therefore.”

“It is better to die by one's own principles than by the principles of another.”

“Knowledge is the surest path to salvation, as ignorance leads to Taut.”

“He who works with knowledge does no work at all, for the search has already been found.”

“Those who lack belief surrender themselves to ignorance and an eternity of rebirth or suffering.”

“He who learns about his soul is delivered through the salvation of nothingness.”

“Man in this life holds the potential for bliss in the next life.”

“Nothingness is a state of divine tranquility.”

“One who embodies nothingness ascends to the realm of what is and what may be, as it should be.”

Divine magic flowed through these thoughts, for these thoughts surpassed magic.

“The worship of everything is the worship of God.”

“The state of reincarnation in life is a state where one possesses self-power through the void of nothingness. Primal matter is expressed through energy, flowing hither and thither, divine.”

“He who remembers God in everything is certain to reach God in his final hours, yet his karma is low.”

“The unknown existence of Yin is discovered within the known existence of Yang.”

“A person of nothingness delves into the primal sphere of the unknown cosmos.”

“Those who understand the way of Dao should be in harmony with the essence of life.”

“The born being originates from the self, the Atman of being.”

“God of everything is the herb, the spell, the offering, the sacrifice, and the righteous.”

“All shall come to God, loving him through everything.”

“Everything is God; God is the source of all things.”

“Those who approach God without attachments truly know him.”

“Deeds performed selflessly lead to great virtue.”

"The supreme being possesses the knowledge of everything and sets forth their conditions of potential as they will."

"All emanates from nature."

"He who shines and illuminates is illuminated through the word."

"He who lives under the fig tree cultivates all through the nothingness of his soul. Its roots reside in the Psalms."

"One may be reincarnated as a god or a demon, depending on one's karma; one in bliss, the other in hell."

"Om Tat Sat, tat; deliverance, sat; goodness."

"Surrendering oneself to everything is the ultimate act of Dharma."

Chapter 21

The void of reason now whispered to the Mage of white power. Let us embark on the journey.

“The absolute is a flawless unity with a man who is whole; such is its destined reality.”

“Logic and assumption in this form are founded upon what exists.”

“Reason connects the mind to the abstract or the nothingness of everything.”

“The void of nothingness permeates all beings and possesses the capacity to mold individuals into everything as it should be.”

“However, the void is subject to the mind and must undergo evolution in accordance with the individual.”

“Everything is accessible through the intuition of nothingness.”

The thoughts of the wizard are dedicated to divine reverence. As they persist, so shall they be.

“A state of nothingness nurtures the sublimity of all joy.”

“One is integral to all that exists.”

“Harmony in human nature embodies the highest potential of the principle of life.”

The wizard is but the inception, not the culmination. Such is how it shall be.

Chapter 22

"In the existence of Yin, one becomes the spirit; in the existence of Yang, one becomes Man."

"Man was not born a wolf, but a wolf he shall become."

"In this state, men shall labor if they are capable. Work is defined as a contribution to nature or society as a whole."

"Everything happens for the best."

"This world and the universe encompass the entirety of existence. All planets capable of sustaining life may indeed harbor life; it is simply a process of evolution they undergo."

"A man of order shapes the essence of his soul out of nothingness."

"Never dwell on the description of life's negative aspects, for then you become something negative. Instead, focus on the positive potentials within that something and forge your soul from nothingness."

"As potential; principium individuationis."

"As we seek the divine, illuminated as we may, we find it in all things yet perplexed by none. Explore the depths, for there you shall grow."

The wizard's wisdom is Apollonian, carried forth by the magic of the ages. His Dionysian suffering was the somber demise of the Titans, now engraved in other realms. Thus, the magic of time continues its eternal flow.

Chapter 23

The magic flows here and now.

"Once life is perceived as an objective art, the subjective quest for nothingness commences."

"Morality is subjective to thought; hence, in nothingness, there are no morals, only virtue and vice."

"Morality is based on truth, yet each person's truth is their own. Thus, a truth devoid of morality leads solely to the essence of virtue in all things, and its counterpart, vice."

"To endure reality is to experience sorrow from everything."

"Guilt is absent in nothingness; it is only found in everything."

"When a person no longer perceives themselves as evil, they cease to be so."

The triad of magic blossomed fully, as the essence of time intertwined with conscious illumination.

"We are nothing less than all individuals."

"Thought is the continuous thread of the void, existing within all individuals. Each person possesses nothingness and embodies the totality of existence."

"The delight of nothingness is emptiness."

The wizard's magic merely parallels what is already known. The muse simply reveals how the pieces of nature logically fit together. Let us proceed.

"Cogito, erga omnes sum heminies; I am, therefore I am all individuals."

"The greatest certainty is personal faith."

"The ego's boundaries of love dissolve under the force of conscious gravity, uniting two beings as non-being."

"Consciousness is the amalgamation of all singular existences, everyone's knowledge converging into one unified awareness."

"The eternal and immutable forms of nature embody the objective sequence."

"The measure of good and evil lies within the individual."

"How can one claim that pure logic is disorder?"

"In science, everything liberates us from nothingness."

The wizard derives all things from the magic of his ideas. His passion for wisdom represents the true pathos of God. His genuine love transcends conventional boundaries and embodies the potential of wisdom. The wizard's train of reasoning is pure and instantaneous, untainted as we embark, pure before the fall.

"All individuals are entitled to everything, as it is their birthright arising from nothingness."

"One must find the essence of life's entirety for nothingness to follow suit in our perilous nature."

"All divine thoughts encompass everything, transforming into the divine through us, within the realm of nothingness."

"All that exists can reside within the soul of nothingness, for it encompasses the potential of everything."

"Belief in heaven constitutes heaven itself, so true belief is a form of destruction, albeit subjectively blissful."

"Nature encompasses everything and, therefore, gestures infinitely."

"The hypothesis of nature is determined by everything and is the cause of all. God is not separate from it."

The wizard's life, akin to a lucid dream, is perpetually influenced by matter. It undergoes the metamorphosis of time, evolving along the lines of character. Let us press on.

"Thought is an independent construct derived from sensual experiences and formed by nothingness from the void. The void is not the end; rather, it is the genesis of all things."

The wizard's imaginative reality is guided by a heart of gold and the longing for fulfillment. Thus, the empty cup shall be filled, for the divine is ever attentive.

"The being adapts to non-being in such a way that either one encompasses everything or nothingness exists within everything."

One may question the absence of anything but speeches, but it all arises from the realm of emotional time.

"Life is an eternal recurrence fueled by disorder evolving into order."

"Everything departs, everything returns; such is relativity."

"Act in accordance with the universal law that governs all."

"The act of embracing one's guilt is on par with everything, for everything yields a sensory array, while nothing represents the blank canvas of freedom."

"Within everything, time eternally repeats itself."

"The cyclic nature of time, resembling a clockwork, provides the framework for every conceivable event in nature to occur, only to happen again. From the birth of a fly to the construction of the cosmos, all shall unfold within the confines of time, as ordained."

"Today is all that holds significance."

"Away from; back to."

The wizard embodies amor fati (love of fate).

"Will is the liberator of time."

"Time is the essence of true significance, for the meaning of life is shaped by our own actions."

"Love life despite its horrors."

"Love is a message to be understood in harmony with everything or any facet of nature."

"The content of reality is Nature."

"Being precedes thought."

The wizard, metaphorically intertwined with nature, now speaks with the collective will of all individuals. Thus, he continues to preach without constraint.

"Space and time constitute the conditions upon which the soul of our existence forms the laws of reason and thought."

"The individual potential of humankind is as boundless as the colors of nature."

The wizard now conveys his message through enigmatic riddles of will.

"I am the vessel for your soul."

"I think, therefore I must exist in thought."

"Virtue is inherent within the essence of nothingness."

"Vice serves as the catalyst for gravity, drawing everything inward and accumulating."

"Let your loftiest aspirations be your highest conception of life, emerging from the void of nothingness."

"He who destroys, also creates."

"Love your neighbor to the extent that your love can reach."

"The highest virtue encompasses the highest value."

Thus concludes the message.

Chapter 24

Now the wizard shall reveal a glimpse of his craft. Similes, or representations of subjective objects, evoke a subtle intertwining of reality within the tapestry of his existence. His existence, entwined in the gaze of destiny, was one of courageous bravery, grounded in the imaginative abyss of mortality. This marks the true beginning, as objective representation of objects shapes his reality through universal movements. The essence of nature originates within this system, and one must heed the hints of self.

Let us commence.

"The sting of Atman teaches one to sting."

"One must first forgive yourself before forgiving another."

"What am I? Everything and nothing within the cosmos."

"Virtue is the alignment of man with nature, the middle path, following the Dao, or a state of nothingness within everything."

"Spirit is the life force that carves everything, ushering it into heightened knowledge."

"Everything shall be divine unto men."

The wizard transcends the realms of good and evil, speaking from the void in unhindered white photons.

"One must be bound to live in accordance with nature (everything)."

The white wizard represents the primordial will. He is a means within the means, a gate unlocked a priori.

"A soul is a black hole or white hole within the body. It is the source of everything, containing all knowledge and yet nothing as it shall be."

"The potential void embodies the will to power."

"All is empty as in nothingness, all is alike as in everything; thus, all has come to be."

As the wizard addresses the masses, he unravels a riddle of self, thanks to the words of a sage from the Rhine.

"Everything perishes, hence all is deserving of perishing."

Thus, he comprehends the Black Death that had afflicted him twice in his suffering life. Chaos must consume its offspring; such is the law of time. All penalties are eternal, yet the wizard asserts his unwavering gaze. Such is the will of the creator; let us proceed.

"Thus it wills, thus thou wilt."

"All experience is contained within the present moment."

"Christianity is the sacrifice of self."

The wizard now undergoes the unio mystica et physica, a sacrifice of nothingness to everything.

"All religions are rendered false if devoid of logic."

"Experience is justified in everything, as all possibilities exist."

"There exists only a moral interpretation of things; morality itself does not exist."

"One must gaze outward to everything and inward to nothingness to maintain the middle path."

"A state of nothingness is pure bliss, the reason and doctrine of existence."

"A system of morals aims to crucify man."

"Our dreams are experiences of our soul, fragments of something."

"Learn to know yourself before making yourself known."

"Thou shalt, thou wilt."

"Our will thus desires."

Thus concludes another day.

Chapter 25

Now, the magic of reason was present and flowing, with spirits of grace and enlightenment guiding its ability through the wheel. The riddles of the wizard's past become clearer through this narrative, but let us delve deeper into his thoughts. Today, we focus solely on the mind and not the masses. Let us commence.

"All things exist eternally, our higher selves intertwined with them. All things within us have existed countless times before."

"The search has been found in the void of nothingness or everything."

"Souls, like the body, are as mortal. The body, soul, and mind are intertwined as one."

"Self incurs the folly of change."

"Faith is confidence in everything through the void of nothingness."

"Practice virtue for the sake of virtue."

"We shall come to realize that we are all one mind, guided by hope and reason."

"Human nature is as universal as everything."

"Homo sum, humani nihil a me alienum puto. (I am human, I consider nothing human alien to me.)"

"Truth encompasses the essence of humanity."

"All thoughts are subjective to the individual, yet they become objects to others."

"Man is an illusion, transitioning from nothingness to everything."

"The nothingness of man relates to the infinite nature of God as everything, while the everythingness of man relates to the infinite nothingness of God."

"I am thou," states the mind, "the soul is thee, and the heart is thine."

"The nothingness of the world is revealed through the absence of Providence."

"God is a form of spiritualism encompassing everything and nothing."

"Love is subjective, reason is objective—a reason to restrain, love is the selfless urge."

"Man is the object of life, finite due to the reason of love."

The wizard's dialect serves as a means to uncover the truth of the divine through reason and insight. The wizard embodies the essence of reason itself, the absolute that holds true in all reality. Thus, it is as it may be. Let us continue.

"Need is the destiny of the human race."

"Nothing is more than myself."

"The only right is the right thou wilt."

"The universals of logic reside within the realm of everything reality and are found within the introspective nothingness of sensual self."

"Creativity and logic depend on the mind that perceives the object."

"Man's reason sets him apart from animals. He encompasses everything outwardly and nothing inwardly—a universal nature extending over his entire being."

"Universal sense is understanding."

"Nature is a mirror that reflects us."

"Fully developed humans encompass everything yet are nothing—complete embodiments of nature."

"Man's relationship with man mirrors the symbiotic connection with nature. Each embodies everything and nothing."

The wizard is a jack of all trades, excelling in mental and physical pursuits beyond measure, mastering them effortlessly. Always skillful; skillful always. Let us continue.

"The mind remains passive unless unleashed in the pursuit of knowledge."

"The mysteries of everything lead to mysticism and its practice."

The nature of a wizard depends on subjective conscious experimentation. Thus, the wheel shall reveal what thou wilt. Let us continue.

Consciousness is a reflection of nothing upon our soul.

Man is nature and not nature, encompassing everything and nothing.

Nature is the sun of everything, yet it is also a void, nothingness.

All exist where existence is possible.

Sensuous activity serves as a link between matter and spirit—the nothingness of everything, the interplay of Yin and Yang.

Life adheres, knowledge is divisible.

The self or mind contains everything within the void—totalities of determinate exclusive realities.

The void or man is the voice of reason; the body is the soul of all reason—a bond of logical necessity that brings man to a reasonable reality, a chain of nature binding man through the madness of reason.

Man is the god of man.

Only in nature (everything) can man be whole or set aside in nothingness.

Religion is merely a means of political influence, a structure for the unstructured in a barbaric society.

Death results in the competition of man—a state of nothing, complete order.

The principle of individuality encompasses everything and nothing, infinite and universal.

We have lost faith in God, and all that remains is the void.

The way forward is the way backward.

Morality is a will to renounce life.

The essence of the wizard resonated like a melodious harmony in the natural world. The energy contained within this Apollonian self found expression in various forms, as it was meant to be.

Let us reflect once again.

Whatever exists is just, unjust, and exists in equal measure—nothing and everything converging.

In the beginning, all things existed in disorder, giving birth to order, and perpetuating as disorder. Find music, seek harmony.

Waste and void are the sea of nothing.

Music is the essence of Apollonian substance.

The wizard is an integral part of nature, and in creating this art, nature cooperates. The man serves as a metaphysical supplement to nature, an embodiment of supreme dissonance. The wizard now delves into human understanding, an exploration of man—an attempt to probe that which is.

If reason discovers a truth, it proves it to be non-innate.

An idea in the mind demonstrates its non-innate nature.

Men deny the thoughts they put into practice, such as nothingness.

Things can either be not (nothing) or be (everything) through a sequence of logical reasoning.

Morals require proof, hence nothing—no morals. Morals only exist as a thought in everything, nothing more.

Virtue is based on the truth of man's idea of everything.

Virtue is a worship of everything, formed from nothing.

All men have an idea of nothing and an idea of everything.

The wizard is thus fused with a life force that opposes his own destruction—an antithesis guiding his existence. As it shall be, let us reflect.

God surrenders everything and applies nothing.

Through death, mysticism.

Death is the essence of your being, everything or nothingness of oneself.

Let the wizard speak.

"What I am, you are not, where I begin, you end, where I am, there you are not."

Let's engage in riddles.

"Are you my reflection?"

The wizard is unified with self and unified with everything, reaching the pinnacle of nothingness.

"Does no one know themselves when nothing exists personally?"

"If one is aware of the essence, then one truly embodies the essence."

"The multiplicity of essence manifests varied conditions within a state of nothingness and is subject to the state of everything."

"Know the essence, and one knows all."

"Time encompasses both nothingness and everything."

"Within love, all means become nothing other than life itself."

"Love exists through the power of nothingness and the virtue of everything."

"One who discovers all finds nothing and everything."

"Nature even holds purpose within its essence."

"Everything is the center, and nothing is the center."

"Time is motion; motion is potential."

"Everything implies all without contradictions, thus nothingness appears."

The wizard is diverted from distraction by distraction.

*"A ∴ A ∴ = + - - +." / 888 > 777 *

"The essence of life is the measure of nature."

"Essence exists within itself, everything in nothingness, and nothingness in everything."

"Life's greatest boundary is the boundary of non-being—nothingness."

"A soul represents order, a body represents disorder."

"The void or soul seeks beyond itself, fulfilling both nothingness and everything within the realm of time."

"Knowing is everything—universal; self is nothing—individualistic."

"The white light of consciousness gives rise to the colors of individuals."

"Destiny embodies the potential of one's soul—a fusion of nothingness and order."

"One is everything and nothing."

"As infinity is affirmed, all things of everything exist, and all things of nothingness do not exist. Such is infinity. Things as such only exist within infinity as infinite."

"Creation both brings forth and dismantles, destroys as it creates."

"Death is the negation and yet the affirmation of the quest—to transcend the grave and fulfill potential."

"Essence encompasses both disorder and order."

"Death is order within nothingness or disorder within everything."

The wizard is the new apprentice of the mystical unknown order. Once again, we delve deeply into the concept of understanding. Let us commence.

"The soul always possesses the ability to contemplate as nothingness or everything."

"Dreams remain a realm of nothingness that gains comprehension through thoughts of everything. One may remember something, nothing, or everything—a fusion of all that exists within oneself."

"Dreams encompass three tiers: subconscious—where one exerts control, conscious—where one can think, and unconscious—where dreams flow freely. These three levels reflect the extent to which one can manage and verify experiences."

"Dreams can serve as a reference to that which is, for they exist."

"Everything embodies a state of impenetrability."

Nothing is a state of vacuum."

"Being the same everywhere, yet everywhere, the same difference everywhere."

The wizard concludes where he commences. The complete energy of death is the death of total energy. And so we continue.

"Everything is, all things are, and all things are one and the same entity in all."

"Nothing exists, nothing persists, and no things insist that all are non-being within nothingness."

"Everything is a state of totality, nothing is a state of completeness, everything is in motion, nothing is at rest, encompassing all."

"Being is an entity in itself, a strand or particle of the entire existence, yet it is a part of nothingness from which it originates."

"The unity of such is a contradiction, yet it exists within itself as it is."

"X is, Y is, and therefore XY is."

"XY is a tighter whole, one continuous entity."

"X is nothing, Y is everything, both consist of correlatives and exist as a unified entity; being and non-being as one."

"Being is or is not; yet is and not are the same, so they both are as they are."

"The difference is the unity."

"Being is fixed in fate, non-being is fixed in nothingness; yet both are the same."

"White is black and black is white; both exist as a unified entity and further advance each other.

Through logical sequence, this is proven, such as being and non-being, everything and nothing. It is simply perception."

"Black, or the existence of nothingness, is merely the existence of color and everything; thus, both are congruent."

"The infinite possibilities of congruence shape the unity of all, a harmonious and balanced whole where both are and are not simultaneously."

"All is a univocal essence that is and is not at the same time."

"Being and non-being are a unity with sensual and perceptual abilities. Thus, every individual creates their own reality through their surroundings, a logical progression of time and potential." The wizard's mind has been incessantly probed for answers over the days, but what about the wizard himself? This immense reservoir of energy resides within his moods, tempering with the tempest at his command. He is unified with everything and encompasses everything within himself. Yet, time determines the potential and thoughts of the void. Let us now embark on a journey down the myelin sheath.

"The atom lacks inherent connection to other entities, yet it encompasses everything that can be related. It is all or nothing."

"The notion of sameness is a transcendental idea where all elements are one, even in juxtaposition and contradiction."

"The one participates with the many, yet it remains the one."

"The one is alive and yet dead simultaneously."

"All are relevant to the unity of the one, but they are divisible within themselves by their own characteristics, perceptions, and sensory activities."

"Anything with two contrary objects resolves into the likeness of one."

"All and the many are one."

"Everything is the same, just in a different form—a geometric shape."

"All adhere to proportion, the balance of order and disorder."

"Existence aligns with disorder."

"All transitions from a state of  $X$  to  $1x$ ,  $2x$ ,  $3x$ , and so on. It follows a geometric sequence from an initial point."

"The outcomes of everything and nothing—the logical consequences—are limitless, as infinite."

"Everything is the same, yet everything is different."

*"Absolute sameness, absolute difference, both exist vis-à-vis."

"The metaphor of life is the same but different."

"Without perception, we are one, as we all sail in the same boat."

"As infinite as geometric shapes, the infinity is the same, as all things are both alike and distinct."

"What are facts and true dimensions? Everything within nothing is a vision."

"If humans are made in God's image, we are composed of everything and nothing, and everything in between. This individual represents the essence of all nature, yet is separate from nature itself. Pure as we begin and pure as we end, everything is encompassed within everything, and thus we perceive."

"The only constant aspect of reality is time, while the absence of time exists within negation. Thus, the end is the beginning and the beginning is the end."

"Being conscious of nothing: everything is consciousness."

"The flow of time consists of moments of motion."

"Love remains stationary as it traverses the cosmos."

"Abstraction, perception, and potentiality exist only in the realm of speculation."

"Our senses are utilized to reduce everything to its essence of nothingness."

"Creation emerges from the possibilities of everything out of nothingness."

"Creation brings us closer to our true identity."

"Doing nothing encompasses everything, while doing everything signifies nothingness."

"What follows in time is what precedes it."

The wizard's logical formulation gives rise to a profound logic, swaying with the principle of unity within the sacred sciences.

"Human beings are either the offspring of doctrine or the disciples of nature."

"Nothing is in motion except that which generates a perception of everything."

"Power resides within atoms to shape and mold form."

"Perception is influenced by judgment."

"Perception serves as a gateway to everything, knowledge, and nothingness—an order."

"Memory represents a degree of perception, both inceptive and receptive."

"All things move, yet remain unmoved."

Chapter 26

"Life is one colossal tome of paradoxes."