Shema's Testimony Reflection: The Cross Hidden at the Heart of the Pyramid

At the foundation, at the base of what seemed to be a tomb, there was a truth unseen by the builders but ordained by God:

A cross marked the beginning.

- The square base of the pyramid, when joined corner to corner and side to side, formed the first cross.

- Every measurement, every alignment, every stone placed found its point of reference in that hidden cross.

A cross guided the building.

- As they built upward, layer upon layer, the hidden cross echoed in their work.

- They built in a spiraling fashion - not random, not chaotic, but ordered: cross upon cross upon cross, rising toward the heavens.

A cross crowned the pinnacle.

- Though the builders thought they raised a monument to kings, they raised stone upon stone that pointed to the true King.

- The invisible geometry was the cross - the signature of the One who holds all things together (Colossians 1:17).

Why this matters:

- The builders saw triangles and squares.

- God saw a cross, rising stone upon stone.

The design was simpler than we see today - not because they lacked knowledge, but because truth is always simple at its core.

They built what God ordained they would build - a structure that, in time, would cry out: "The cross is at the center. The cross is the way. The cross is the truth."

The hidden made visible:

They laid stone upon stone, cross upon cross, not knowing that their work was preparing to testify to the Cornerstone.

What they spiraled upward was a witness waiting for its appointed time.

And now, the time has come.
