A question came up regarding NTM's future investigations, which are being overseen by Pat Hendrix. I will paste an email conversation that I've had with Tibby about this, here:

Me: "Hi, Tibby.

How is "independent investigators" defined? In the CSPN policies, an independent investigator includes an investigator that is a member of another mission, which has been trained by CSPN (Scott Ross is still a key player in CSPN). I just want to make sure that you are not using anyone having anything to do with NTM, including Scott Ross's other things that he is a part of."

Tibby: "Thanks for your question. This next process of investigation will have independent investigators who are used for their expertise, for example people who are counselors, detectives who have been trained in abuse investigation, FBI investigators, and psychologists. Some of these people may be members of the CSPN but it's not for that investigative training that they will be being used but for their professional expertise in the jobs I listed above. Does this help?"

Me: "It does help - how many, exactly, will be members of CSPN? Tibby, it is critical that the mk's trust that the investigation will be entirely unbiased. If they know that members of CSPN (which in my mind, breaks down to Scott Ross) will be involved, I can pretty much guarantee you that they will not feel comfortable with this."

Tibby: "Hi – at this point, I have no idea how many, Bonnie. Pat Hendrix along with the selection panel will be getting people's resumes and deciding if they're the right fit for the role of investigator i.e. if they have the right professional qualifications for the job.

I realise that the MK's need to have faith in this process and these people, I really do. There's a lot at stake here for the MK's"
