Who are we connected to and where are they headed? We truly are the company we keep, so we should strive to be innocent in every way even our conversations. This promotes a life of peace with a good mind for doing what's right for everyone involved.

We should want to have people that we can share our visions of success with but we must show that we're friendly in order to be surrounded by like minds. We all should be striving to live a life that's building towards the future world, that will be filled with love without corruption. True friends shouldn't waste a minute to correct us, no matter what because in doing so it helps the whole bunch when everyone is living at a high level. The ones that can hear and keep the rules of life are the people you should want on your side because they will stick closer than a brother during hard times.

FRIENDS

How Many Of Us Had Them Growing up? You may have had people that you went to school or lived in the same neighborhood with who naturally became close due to location. These people would eventually be called friends, sometimes in the matter of weeks before proving them to be so. This is the way a lot of us are still picking friends in our adult lives as well, which isn't a compliment at all. Who we're associated with says a lot about our character which could help or hinder us from getting the best results out of life. We should take our time choosing who to share moments with because many people are only a friend for an opportunity.

GOOD BUSINESS

Written by: @YV_SLIM

As it is written, you should rather have a good name than choice silver or gold. Having access to large amounts of liquidity doesn't make you a good business partner. It only makes you a person with some money. Think about it like "A man walks in the bank with 25k in his account with a 529 credit score trying to take out a loan and gets denied. Versus a man with 6k in his account and 740 credit score, he gets approved." The difference is all in the name and how you carry that name. A good name in the business world introduces opportunity. Customers, business partners, investors feel more compelled to recommend your services anytime your expertise is brought about.

In order to attract new and retain existing customers, you need to dedicate resources and invest into building strong, long-term business relationships that help people see the value and achieve their goals with a product or service. Just like your personal relationships, business relationships take time to develop. It's an investment. When you think of RORs (Return of relationship) the more customers you help the more they are willing to return. Speaking for myself I personally feel that if were treated like true valued customer I would always continue to do business and services with that company. Even if I had to commute further to handle the business. It does not matter good business is good business.

MISREPRESENTING FATHERHOOD

Above

As it is written in the scriptures, "Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it." This is clear instructions to fathers and mothers to raise (train) their children in the way that they should go.

As the title of the article says "Misrepresentation of Fatherhood" is what a recent film has done when trying to portray fatherhood in action. The story is about a man who lost his wife while she was giving birth to his daughter, goes on and continues as a single father to the child. Two factors come to play in this film that can lead to confusion.

When the girl is older she gets enrolled into a school where the policy is they must wear a dress at school. After the daughter was told to wear a skirt instead of the pants she told her father it's because it's a rule. His response to her was, "Rules? We don't need no stinkin' rules."

Rules? We don't need no stinkin' rules.

Towards the end of the movie when his daughter is allowed to wear pants at school, he then decides to wear a dress while he drops her off.

Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it

- Proverbs 22:6

The woman shall not wear that which pertaineth unto a man, neither shall a man put on a woman's garment: for all that do so [are] abomination unto YAHUAH your Mighty One

- Deuteronomy 22:5
