

11/20/24

United States Naval Academy
The 1963 Center for Academic Excellence
The Writing & Communication Center
Nimitz Library Room 224

Mr. Young,

It is with great pleasure that I let you know that certain chapters from your book "Children of the Stars" have been chosen to be featured at the United States Naval Academy.. Professor Brian Weber from the English Department, will be incorporating several chapters into his curriculum for the Fall 2024 semester. Below is the course mentioned along with the syllabus prompt. Congratulations and thank you for your contribution to the young minds of our future military leaders.

Kindest Regards,

Course: HE111

Title: RHETORIC AND INTRO TO LITERATURE I

Credits: 3—0—3

Description: The first in a two-course sequence. Through the study of a diverse range of essays, short fiction, and drama, students will learn the fundamentals of literary and rhetorical analysis while developing an understanding of writing as a process—from brainstorming, to outlining, to drafting and revising. Assignments will focus on crafting analytical arguments and may include personal essays and public speaking/presentations.