

Mission First, People Always

I am a professional photographer raising my family in my wife's native Scottsdale, Arizona.

I first started my work in photography in the 1990s in the Air Force, where I was a photojournalist capturing photos of U.S. military operations for documentation and publication.

Like many people who joined the military at that time, I didn't intend to stay in very long. But I wound up spending a seemingly quick 21 years serving; first as a photojournalist, and then as the communications director for several Air Force and Special Operations Units, where I led teams of photojournalists and videographers both at home and into conflict zones around the world.

After leaving the Air Force, I spent a couple of years as the Communications Director of a local government agency before my wife and I decided it was time to return to what I loved, and ShutterHouse was born.

Going in, I understood the local Real Estate Photography field was already crowded with corporate, manufactory photography agencies as well as high-priced, flashy boutiques. I wanted ShutterHouse to be neither. ShutterHouse would simply become synonymous with frank honesty, unmatched client service, and excellent imagery. Integrity, Service and Excellence were the core values I followed in the Air Force and what continue to rely upon as my compass today.

So that's what clients find with ShutterHouse: fantastic images, impeccable reliability, and an eager willingness to help people get what they need most—professional imagery without worry or ego.

That's mission accomplishment for me, and that's what you'll get with ShutterHouse.
