The Galapagos Islands are near the equator, so this blue-footed booby soon gets warm after feeding in the sea.

The hot sun burns.

Whilst a marine iguana will cool off in the seawater, it will have to return to land or face getting too cold.

I will return to the surf.

*Whilst fur seals are incredible swimmers,
they haul out on beaches to rest
and to raise their young.*

My fur gets wet in the surf.

Mother fur seals show great care for their pups, feeding them milk and protecting them from harm.

We curl up on the sand.

A male, or bull, fur seal can get very grumpy if other males try to stay on his area of beach.

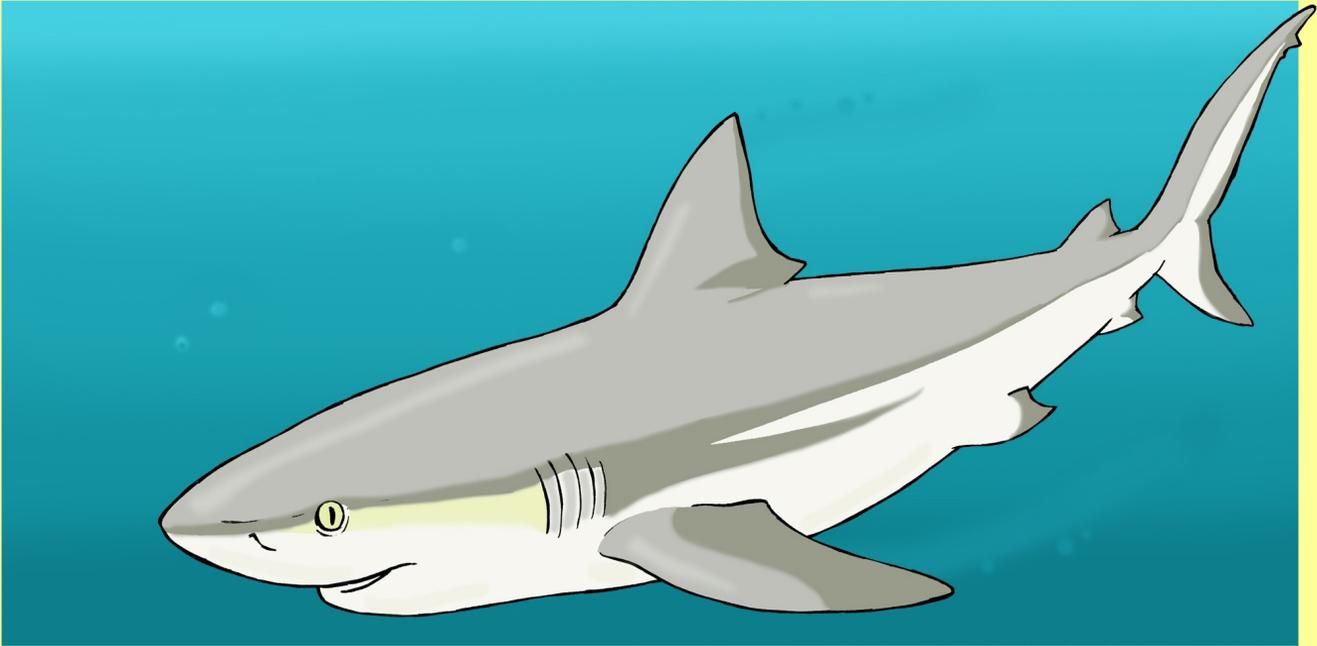

Do not disturb this burly bull!

Manta rays glide through the waters filtering out tiny prey with their gills.

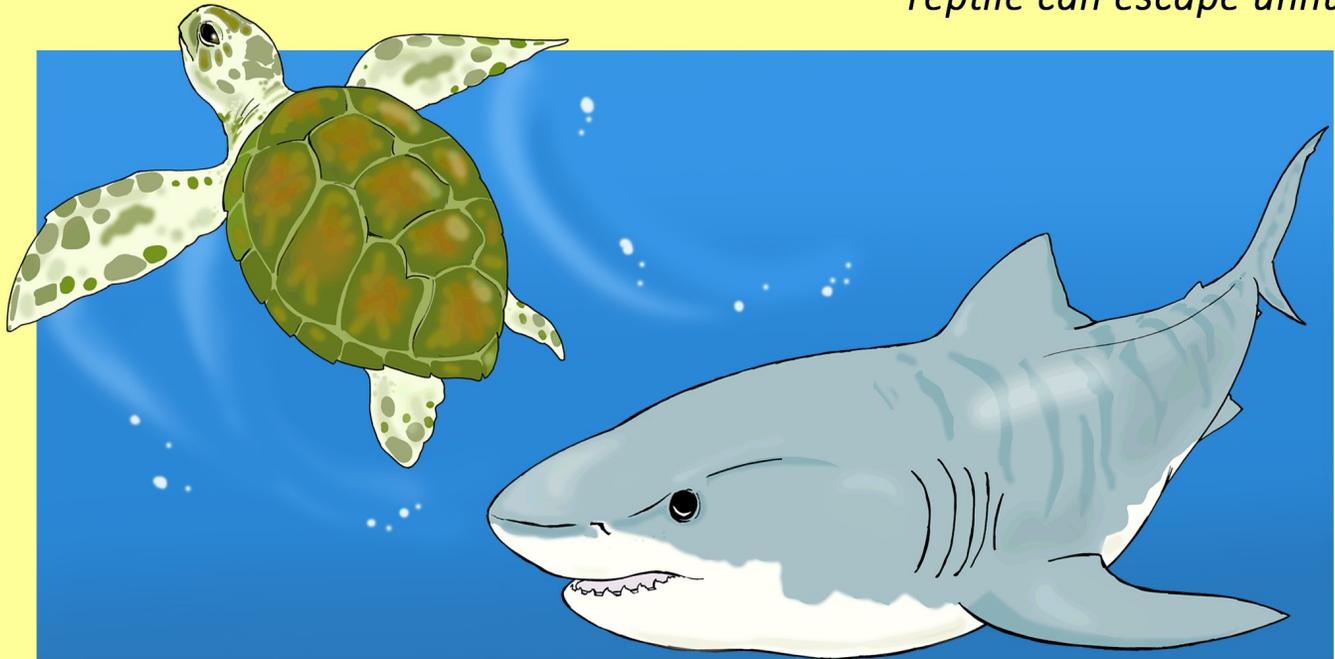

A manta turns in a big curve.

This Galapagos shark wanders the dark waters in search of prey.

I lurk in the murk.

*Tiger sharks hunt for green turtles.
Using its protective shell, the reptile can escape unhurt.*

A turtle turns. It is not hurt.

The shells of Galapagos tortoise look very different depending on which of the islands they are found.

I lurk in the turf.

Land iguanas eat spiky plants despite the sharp spines covering them.

This will not hurt me! Burp!
