Gayle [00:00:00] Welcome to the O.S.A.T. Pathway Podcast. It's a one step at a time pathway to success and fulfillment. Danelle Davidian graduates from college. She did well. Now that the whole world has laid out before her, she doesn't know what step to take next. When you realize that the rest of the story is all up to you, it can be scary and unnerving, especially if the pathway before you looks rather murky. Danelle was full of questions and she didn't know where to find the answers, but she decided to reach out to a lifeline, her family. She writes a letter to her grandpa Burl, asking him for answers. Burl knew his granddaughter was capable, smart and hardworking. According to him, she had it all. Yet he also knew that she was somewhat lost when he read her letter and she really needed help. The 60 years of success in real estate and development taught Burl Gann what elite business schools don't teach. The kind of lessons that are simple, yet profoundly essential to building a fulfilling life. He wrote Danelle a guide map of sorts. He wrote her a pathway forward. He called it the O.S.A.T. Pathway. The one step at a time pathway. Each of the steps along this pathway are lessons that contributed to his own success. Yet, more than that, they contributed to his fulfillment in life. On this podcast, Danelle and her grandpa Burl discuss these same steps in-depth. Joining their conversation are Burl's son Matt and his daughter Lisa. Matt Gann is a human resources manager. He shares 20 years of military and civilian government experience. Lisa LeClaire rounds out the conversation, sharing her 30 years of medical sales and trainee experience. The O.S.A.T. Pathway Podcast is seven episodes of conversations shared by three generations of one family around their dining room table. It was recorded over two days in June of 2022. Thank you for joining us along the O.S.A.T. Pathway Podcast.
