

- Gladiola - Here, it's the corms that lead to excessive drooling, lethargy, and vomiting.
- Hyacinth - You may be drawn to its sweet scent, but keep your dogs, cats, and cattle away from this bulb, because it can damage their mouth and esophagus and cause violent tremors.
- Lily - To put it simply, lilies are definitely not the cat's meow. The verdant and fragrant bulb can cause kidney failure for cats. Oddly enough, lilies don't seem to affect dogs in the same way.
- Tulip - Eating the cup-shaped flower may lead to convulsions, cardiac problems, and gastrointestinal discomfort.

Vines

While these climbing growers are useful for sprucing up your landscaping and vertical space, they can also be toxic to dogs and cats, particularly since wisteria contains poisonous seeds and pods.

- Clematis
- English and Boston Ivy
- Morning Glory
- Wisteria

Other

- Poinsettia - There's a reason for the phrase, "Beware of the poinsettia." But, it's not as toxic as we've been led to believe. However, it can cause irritation of the mouth and stomach for kittens and puppies.
- Oak trees - The acorns and leaves are poisonous.
- Tomato plants - Take care when planting this summer favorite because it contains solanine, a highly toxic element.
- Mint, Parsley, Oleander, and Yellow Bird of Paradise are also harmful.
