Author Interview with Beth Davis - Q & A:

Q: What inspired you to create the Super Unique Beast series?

A: Growing up, I always loved storytelling and art, but I didn't always see books that celebrated kids who were different like me. I wanted to create a series that helps children feel proud of who they are, whether they have a big personality, a learning challenge, or a disability. Super Unique Beast is all about showing kids that their uniqueness isn't something to change—it's their superpower!

Q: What makes Super Unique Beast different from other children's books?

A: There are a lot of amazing children's books out there, but Super Unique Beast stands out because it combines fun, adventurous storytelling with deep, meaningful messages about confidence, diversity, and inclusion. Each book features a lovable character overcoming a relatable challenge—whether it's struggling to fit in, navigating a disability, or learning in a different way. My goal is to make sure that every child sees themselves in a story and feels celebrated!

Q: How do your books support social-emotional learning (SEL) for kids?

A: Social-emotional learning is so important because it helps kids build confidence, empathy, and resilience. In Super Unique Beast, each story teaches a core SEL lesson—like self-acceptance, perseverance, teamwork, or problem-solving. The books also come with free classroom discussion guides to help teachers and parents continue the conversation beyond the story.

Q: Why is disability and neurodiversity representation important in children's books?

A: Kids deserve to see themselves in books, and that includes children with disabilities, ADHD, dyslexia, autism or other unique traits. Representation matters because it helps kids feel valued, and it also teaches empathy to their peers. In Super Unique Beast, I include characters with different abilities and challenges, but instead of focusing on limitations, the stories highlight their strengths and creativity in solving problems.

Q: What has been the most rewarding part of creating the Super Unique Beast series?

A: The best part is hearing from kids, parents, and teachers who say these books made a difference in their lives. When a child tells me, 'Lacinda the Lion is just like me!' or when a teacher says my books helped start a powerful conversation in the classroom, it's the best feeling in the world. Knowing that I'm helping kids feel seen, valued, and celebrated makes all the hard work worth it!

Q: What advice do you have for aspiring authors and illustrators?

A: First, just start! You don't have to have everything figured out—writing and illustrating is a journey. Second, stay true to your message. If you're passionate about a story, there's a child out there who needs to hear it. And finally, don't be afraid to self-publish or take creative risks. The world needs more diverse, unique stories—so if you have one, go for it!

Q: How do you come up with your characters and stories?

A: Many of my characters are inspired by real kids and real experiences. I think about the challenges kids face—whether it's feeling different, struggling to learn, or finding confidence—and I build a fun, lovable character around that. I also LOVE creating stories that are vibrant, adventurous, and full of heart, so kids stay engaged while learning something valuable.

Q: What's next for Super Unique Beast? Are there more books coming?

A: YES! I have more books in the works, continuing the Super Unique Beast series with new characters and challenges. I'm also expanding resources for parents, counselors and educators, offering more tools to help kids build confidence and celebrate diversity. Plus, everytime I launch a new book, there will be lots of fun events and giveaways, so stay tuned!
