

POWERED BY GOD:

THE LIFE THAT NEVER FAILS

Look at life! really look at it, and you will see something that is undeniable, and something so vast and awe-inspiring that it demands recognition: God is so conspicuous. His presence is laced into the very fabric of existence, and into the very force that gives and sustains life itself. Life never tires. It does not weaken, falter, or run out of energy. It does not need rest, nor does it require a process to generate its strength. It simply is. Because life's very nature is energy—boundless, self-sustaining, and ceaselessly flowing. Unlike anything else in existence, it does not need to be recharged, refueled, or rebuilt. It does not require an external force to keep it running. Life is sustained by itself alone, because GOD is life. In him, we move, we breathe, and we live.

Yet everything else in the world like electricity, oil, nuclear power, heat, sound, and motion requires input, extraction, and conversion. These forces are limited. They deplete, they require renewal, and they run their course. But life! Life is the most powerful, most expensive, and the most awe-inspiring force in existence. It is not fueled by anything that is lesser than itself. Life requires life to sustain it, and only God—the very source of life—can provide it. Think about the staggering reality of this: God created life with the same amount of power that is required to sustain it. The very act of creation demanded an unfathomable force, and that same force continues, uninterrupted, to uphold all life. The expense of life is life itself; nothing less. That means, “we will always need God in life, through life, and for life, because only God is enough to sustain what He has created. This is why life cannot be lived apart from Him. It is not something we generate for ourselves. It is not something we fuel through effort, striving, or external sources. It is God's breath (or should we say, “God’s energy, or God’s power)” that upholds all things. Without Him, nothing exists. Without Him, life ceases.

And yet, how often do people take life for granted? How often do they fail to see the sheer wonder of existence? The fact that life does not run out, does not break down, and does not crumble under the weight of time, this alone should bring us to our knees in awe of God. God is unmistakable. His power is undeniable. His presence is inescapable. The very life coursing through your body at this moment is proof of His greatness. Every breath, every heartbeat, and every moment is a testimony to the One who sustains it all. Life is the most expensive force in existence, and yet, God gives it freely. How can we not live in gratitude? How can we not be in awe? To live is to witness the greatness of God. To exist is to be surrounded by His unmistakable power. Life itself is the evidence of God.

LIFE! THE ENERGY THAT NEVER RUN OUT ...

That felt so good that I decided to make another chapter to do that all again in another way. Here we go!

God’s presence in our existence is unparalleled—a force so remarkable, so wondrous, that it commands awe and demands acknowledgment. Life itself is the manifestation of His endless power and divine perfection. Notice how life, in its essence, never tires, never runs out of energy, and never grows weary or fatigued. It does not require rest or replenishment. Life does not expend itself in a way that diminishes—it is self-sustaining because it flows naturally, without need for a process, and/or without additives. This truth alone reveals the infinite nature of God’s creation. Life, by its very nature, is energy that is pure, unyielding, and complete.

It does not generate or build itself up; it simply exists, because energy is intrinsic to its being. This energy flows effortlessly and abundantly, without being consumed or diminished, perpetuating itself with divine perfection. It is God's breath within us, the heartbeat of existence, and the rhythm of eternity.

Now consider the cost, that is, the expense, or the price, that is required to create and sustain life. Since, expense is determined by the energy needed to maintain or build something, no other form of energy known to mankind—whether electricity, oil, nuclear power, sound, or heat—comes close to the magnitude required to sustain life. Life itself entails the greatest expense; it demands energy at its fullest, most complete capacity. And yet, God, in His infinite wisdom and power, provides this energy effortlessly, sustaining not only life but the entire universe with His divine nature. This is the wonder of God! ... He created life as the ultimate gift. A gift so expansive, and so powerful, that it requires the same magnitude of energy to maintain as it did to create. There is no diminishing His work, and there is no limits to His provision. Life continues, flows, and thrives, because God ordained it so. We are entirely dependent on Him for life, within life, through life, and for life itself. Without Him, existence would cease. He is the source, the sustainer, the guide, and the giver.

This truth is nothing short of breathtaking. It reveals the conspicuous and undeniable presence of God in every moment, every breath, and every heartbeat. Life is the most expensive, most valuable, and most extraordinary phenomenon—and it is a gift freely given by the Creator. To live is to witness His power, to embrace His love, and to marvel at His wonder. Let us, therefore, live in gratitude and humility, acknowledging that every moment is sustained by His immeasurable energy and divine purpose. Let us recognize that our life and lifestyle, our existence and our being, are reflections of His extraordinary and remarkable creation. Let us live for Him.

ENJOY LIFE TO THE FULLEST

Life is an extraordinary gift; a masterpiece of completeness that encircles us like an unbroken circle of 360 degrees. It is full, whole, and all-encompassing. Life gives itself to us, and there is no alternative path, no other realm where our existence can stray. We are immersed in it, and moving ever onward within and towards life itself. It's not a journey of departure but of deep belonging; a singular direction that grounds us firmly in this magnificent reality. Yet so often, we live as though life is something to chase, something to uncover, create, or attain, forgetting that we were born already possessing the fullness of it. We are not empty vessels searching for meaning—we are miracles, brought into being with life overflowing within us. To search for "more" or "better" is like trying to reinvent the wheel. Life, in its essence, is not fractured or partial; it is the alpha and omega, the beginning and the end. From life, we journey through life, to life. And still, so many people strive relentlessly to reach for goals as though they could somehow transcend the extraordinary gift of life that is already theirs. They aim higher, push further, hoping to craft a version of life that is superior to the one that they were gifted with at birth. But this is an illusion. There is no ladder to climb, no summit beyond life, no higher plane to reach. Life is not a fragmented experience with levels or stages to conquer—it is whole, complete, unparalleled. So, why reach for what does not exist? Why exhaust ourselves by trying to forge what is already infinite and unbounded? Life is not about constructing something new or achieving external markers of success; it is about embracing, cherishing, and fully inhabiting the sacred gift that we have been given. It is about gratitude and about reveling in the miracle of simply being. To live is to awaken each day in awe of the abundance that we already hold. It is to discover beauty in the present moment and honor the profound completeness of existence. Stop searching for more and start recognizing what you have. You were born complete. Life is yours—wholly, beautifully, entirely. Now, the question is not how to make it better, but how to celebrate the perfection of what it already is. Let gratitude fill your heart, let wonder fuel your steps, and let the raw truth of life inspire you to live boldly, passionately, and deeply. This is life—your life—and it is enough. It is everything.
