Zoom Meeting with Daniel Wood become available.

Dear faithful Patriots,

Just a lot of apologies this week. I'm a bit late and I did not cut the articles this week. I can't believe I ate the WHOLE THING. They are just too important.

I apologize also that this weeks articles spell so much doom. Is it simply a reflection of my mood, or does the future really look so dismal for our great nation.

The saving grace. We know what happens in the end. The future looks dim, but there is hope. Watch this.

Colorado River Tea Party Minutes

April 20, 2023

Jim called the meeting to order at 6 PM

Gilbert gave the Invocation

John led us in the Pledge of Allegiance

Nikki read the minutes from the last meeting. Correction made in the minutes to read Hobbs vetoed 29 bills passed by legislature (not Congress)

Ruth was not present, Treasurers report waived

John gave the Legislative Report. Governor Hobbs vetoed HB 2509, the Home Cooked Meals Bill, which prohibits food vendors from selling home cooked tamales, burritos and more. She would impose a fine of $500. Hobbs approval rating at 100 days is 47% approval and 36% disapproval and she ranked nationwide approval of 50 governors at 47th

Sheriff Mark Lamb, Republican, is running for US Senate in Arizona for 2024.

Carla was not present. Ways and Means Committee report waived

Old Business – Jim thanked all the volunteers who helped the GOP at the County Fair booth and to Ruth for working at the Wellton voter registration booth

Tim Dunn is our speaker this evening. He is speaking on the expulsion of Liz Harris in the Arizona House of Representatives LD 13. Representative Dunn did not think the presentation that Jacqueline Breger made was correct or appropriate in the joint elections committee hearing of the House and Senate.

Liz Harris invited Breger to give a presentation.

On March 6 a complaint was filed with the House Ethics Committee which found that Harris violated the chamber's rules and the findings from the committee hearing were as follows:

1. Breger made criminal allegations
2. Prior to the meeting Harris knew Breger would present this information
3. Harris lied when she claimed she didn't know what Breger was going to say
4. The ethics panel found that Harris violated House rule number one, which prohibits disorderly behavior that could damage the House's institutional integrity. The House voted 46-13 in favor of expulsion. Eighteen of the 31 Republicans joined the 28 Democrats in favor of expulsion. Harris broke ethics rules when she invited a guest that made unsubstantiated claims at the joint committee meeting in February. Representative Dunn said it was a hard decision to make but if you made a decision to bring someone in you could have apologized and shown remorse. He said Harris showed no remorse, no integrity and was a liar. She is the most vocal, most public and not a team player. He said she threatened to sue and she said she did not lie. The legislature is expected to have integrity and be accountable and he did vote yes to expel her. The precinct committeemen in LD 13 have nominated 3 candidates for this seat. The candidates are Liz Harris with 107 votes, Julie Willoughby with 95 votes and Steve Steele with 76 votes. Representative Dunn then said he was open to answer any questions from the audience. A member asked what was her disorderly conduct exactly and Mr. Dunn said Rule 1 stipulates disciplinary action can be taken for not showing up to vote or for lying under oath and disorderly behavior. The range of discipline can range from stripping a member of their appointment on a committee, censorship or expulsion. Most Tea Party members felt the disciplinary action was too severe and it sounds like the liberals were trying to push information from Breger under the rug and punish Harris for inviting her to speak. Dunn said everyone thinks it's about the testimony as to why she was expelled but it was about the integrity. It was brought up that if Harris got the most votes from Republican precinct committeemen LD13 even if she violated the code of ethics, will they let her back in? Dunn said it depends on her attitude and her heart. The Maricopa County Board of Supervisors will ultimately decide who fills the seat since Harris's district is in Maricopa County.

OP-ED

Where's Our Helen Reddy?

Allan West

Yes, I know that Mrs. Reddy passed away in 2020. The question posed in this missive goes beyond the obvious. Helen Reddy gained great fame as a feminist and activist who sang the 70s song, "I Am Woman." I remember that song and I am sure many of you do as well. It was the defining song of the feminist movement.

"If I had to, I can do anything,
I am strong, I am invincible, I am Woman"

However now, it appears that there is much confusion about what a woman is. Supreme Court Justice Ketanji Brown-Jackson could not answer the question during her confirmation hearing. Oops, did I use the proper pronoun?

Growing up down south, I remember when girls' basketball was played half-court, three-on-three. There were three players designated to play offense and three to play defense. They did not cross the half-court line but played their respective positions in the half-court. We just witnessed record attendance for the NCAA Women's Final Four, held right here near my home in Dallas, Texas. The television viewing audience broke records as well and I was one of them. I was riveted watching LSU, Iowa, South Carolina, and Virginia Tech, in both semi-final and final games. It was a full-court marvel and the LSU women scored 102 points against Iowa in the championship game. I will admit, the Women's NCAA championship game was more thrilling than the men's, where UConn defeated San Diego State.

I attended the University of Tennessee and remember watching while there and over the years, an icon of Women's college basketball, Pat Summit. All of this is a result of the fight for Title IX to bring about equality of opportunity and fairness in competition for Women's sports.

I am sure Helen Reddy was pleased.

However, in this day and age, we now have biological males – cowards who struggle as male athletes – claiming to be female and competing against women. The most noticeable of them all is William Thomas who as a male swimmer was 462nd in the nation. Suddenly, he competes against female athletes and wins NCAA championships. Last month, Women's History month, no less, Thomas was recognized and has even had a Sports Illustrated cover.

I am sure Helen Reddy would be scratching her head.

To top this, we now have an accomplished female swimmer, Riley Gaines, who actually tied Thomas but did not get the placement, being attacked by biological males wearing dresses.

Why? Well, for the crime of being a female speaking out against biological males competing against females. See, if you do not embrace and support the leftist ideological agenda and comply with the gender dysphoria delusion, you are the one who is wrong. Not only that, killing is also justified.

A biological female named Audrey Elizabeth Hale fell under the gender dysphoria spell and considered herself a male. The state of Tennessee passed legislation, and signed it into law, to protect children from gender mutilation surgeries, puberty blockers, and hormonal therapies, as well as these insidious and disturbing all-ages drag queen performances. Hale, who was 28, decided, after careful planning, to carry out an attack against her former school, Covenant Christian Academy. She, yes, she, was armed with three weapons, two semi-automatic rifles, and a handgun, and shot her way into the school, gunning down six individuals – Evelyn Dieckhaus (9), Hallie Scruggs (9), William Kinney (9), Cynthia Peak (61), Katherine Koonce (60), and Mike Hill (61). In other words, a biological female suffering from a mental condition called gender dysphoria, shot and killed two little girls and two women in cold blood as part of a premeditated attack, in addition to a little boy and a Black man. I guess Mike Hill's was not a Black life that matters.

To this date, Joe Biden, Kamala Harris . . . no one in the Biden administration has called out their names. But, Madonna and Miley Cyrus want to have fundraisers for the gender dysphoria community in Nashville. Sadly, White House spokesperson, Karine Jean-Pierre stated three days after the Nashville shooting, "they want us to fight for their freedoms, it is disturbing, and our hearts go out to those—the trans community—as they are under attack right now, but this is a president who has said many times before he has their backs. He will continue to have their backs and he will continue to fight for them, and his record shows that."

In other words, Riley Gaines can be attacked, and 9-year-olds can be gunned down. Their constitutional rights and inalienable right to life matters little when it comes to the ideological agenda of leftism and its gender-dysphoric allies. Women's sports can be ruined as long as we cower to the delusion of less than one percent of this country. Children should have their bodies mutilated and if parents do not consent, they risk losing their children. So much for parental rights.

Nike chose a biological male to be their brand influencer for their sports bras. Interesting. I remember during the feminist movement that women, meaning real women, were burning their bras to symbolize freedom. Now, women aren't even being used to promote sports bras. And this is all because American businesses think it is more important to have a high Corporate Equity Index as adjudicated by the George Soros-funded Human Rights Campaign, a powerful LGBTQIA+ lobbying organization.

Helen Reddy once sang, "I am woman, hear me roar." Now we have biological males roaring and masquerading as being better women than women. Being the dad to two women, married to a woman, and son of a woman, well, that is just FUBAR!

Steadfast and Loyal.

Regulatory Octopus Is Strangling Our Economy

We want sound regulation. But it shouldn't cost our families and businesses $2 trillion a year.

By Stephen Moore -- Creators Syndicate

Every schoolkid knows — or used to know — that the United States has three branches of government. At least that's what the textbooks say.

But really, we have four branches of government.

That's because Congress — the legislative branch — has for decades delegated lawmaking authority to the unconstitutional fourth branch of the U.S. government: independent regulatory agencies. By some estimates, there are more than 300 of these agencies sticking their nose into every aspect of American life and business, from what kind of car you can buy to the temperature setting on your thermostat to what you can build on your own private property.

Who are these regulatory czars accountable to? Who elected them?

To his credit, former President Donald Trump tried to rein in the regulatory blob. He promised to rescind two regulations for every new regulation enacted while he was president. He actually repealed about five rules for every new one.

But President Joe Biden LOVES to regulate.

On his first day in office, Biden rescinded the Trump policy, and the ratios have been roughly reversed. He also got rid of stringent cost-benefit analysis for new rules. This was to ensure that the regulation wasn't going to have a price tag far exceeding any societal benefit.

Now we are getting a regulatory explosion with private sector costs as high as $2 trillion a year, according to the Competitive Enterprise Institute. The federal government doesn't abide by the Ten Commandments. Now there are more than 10,000. Biden's latest whopper is an Environmental Protection Agency rule that would effectively ban the production of gas-powered cars within 10 years.

Almost all recent presidents left office with more rules and red tape than when they entered. Ronald Reagan and Trump were two exceptions. Richard Nixon created the EPA, even though states were doing a fine job cleaning air and water. It was the George W. Bush administration that passed an energy bill requiring household appliances like home refrigerators and dishwashers to be "energy-efficient," which in practice meant they didn't work very well.

What can be done to trim the tentacles of the regulatory octopus? How about cutting those budgets and their enormous bureaucratic staffs? Over the last 30 years, the budgets of the regulatory agencies have more than tripled after adjusting for inflation from $25 billion to $75 billion. If Biden has his way, next year the regulatory octopus will exceed $100 billion to arm super-regulators like Lina Khan of the Federal Trade Commission. Khan has tremendous authority over whether businesses should be able to merge. She's never run even a lemonade stand in her whole life.

Congress still has power over the purse. Cutting the regulatory budgets in half would still ensure safety, financial soundness and a clean environment while saving half a trillion dollars over 10 years. The Republicans should start by ensuring that the snoops at the IRS don't get 87,000 more IRS agents to harass citizens and pry into every private transaction we make.

Yes, we want sound regulation. But it shouldn't cost our families and

Victor Davis Hanson: Fiddling America Away

BY TYLER DURDEN

We fixate only on the irrelevant that we think we can address while ignoring the existential we know we no longer can solve...

The last few weeks, the world had been writing off the United States as either crazy or irrelevant as it watches America cannibalize itself.

Friends tremble at our sudden decline. Enemies rejoice. Neutrals make the necessary adjustments to join the ascendant non-American side.

The symptoms of our decline abroad appear everywhere. The more Joe Biden brags about the crippling oil sanctions on Russia, friends like India and allies like Japan ignore them. And why not, when Biden has no idea how long the war in Ukraine will last, or how much wherewithal the United States can, should, or will give Kyiv, or how its on-to-Red-Square blank check will finally end?

Big Biden talks about more solar and wind farms, and green new deals won't fill the gas tanks in Munich or heat the homes of Kyoto, or lower the price of imported oil in the United Kingdom. Claiming the Afghanistan mess was a success fools no one.

Allies ask who are our leaders.

- An impaired Joe Biden who never is quite sure where he is, what he is doing, or whom he is with?
- Kamala Harris, whose only interests appear to be demagoguing racial and social tensions with a shrinking vocabulary?
- Senator John Fetterman (D-Penn.), who was elected on the argument it was unkind not to vote for a candidate who was physically and mentally impaired?
- Energy Department kingpin Sam Brinton, the cross-dresser in lipstick, now charged with felonies for stealing women's luggage at airport carousels?
- Pete Buttigieg, our transportation secretary, who virtue signals melodramas of the past when he is clueless how to fix crises in the present?
- Our Pentagon brass who fixate on saying the correct thing now to ensure the lucrative defense contractor billets later?

Allies fear that after abandoning billions of dollars in weaponry in Kabul to the terrorist Taliban, and pumping billions of dollars more of arms into the Ukrainian meat grinder, and failing to increase U.S. armaments production, Washington simply does not have the resources to match China in either a looming proxy or head-to-head war.

Browse through any media account of the U.S. military, and the storyline is one of racial, gender, gay, or transgendered wokeism, or a looming manpower shortage—not a new lethal weapon, a new division of veteran soldiers, or a new program to up the level of training, physical prowess, and mental attitude among the ranks.

The men and women, whom Russia and China most fear, feel that they are unwelcome in the U.S. military and so no longer join. Those whom our enemies hope do enlist, sign up to the delight of their quota-driven, identify politics recruitment officers—and our enemies as well.

NATO member Turkey is calling for an ecumenical Islamic effort combining Shiites and Sunnis, Persians and the Arabs, Middle Easterners and all Muslims—to unite against Israel. And why not when Biden had gratuitously insulted and yet begged Saudi Arabia and the Gulf exporting states, ignored the Abraham Accords, ostracized Israel, radically cut back on U.S. energy production capability, and groveled to Iran to reenter the Iran Nuclear Deal?

China now openly talks of war with the United States. Beijing claims the Taiwan Strait as its own de facto territorial waters. It partners with Russia to add to a growing alliance of Iran, and North Korea, and beckons Turkey, ostensibly a NATO ally.

After refusing to come clean about its birthing in Wuhan of the gain-in-function, engineered COVID-19 virus that killed 1 million Americans, China is unapologetically defiant about sending a spy balloon over key classified sites throughout the continental United States—part of the continual, humiliating follow-up to its inaugural smack down of Biden's diplomats at the Anchorage mini-summit.

Oil producers, China, hostiles like Russia and Iran, and opportunists like Turkey and India all foresee the end of the dollar as the international currency. After the American humiliation in Afghanistan, the Islamic world, particularly on the West Bank and in Syria, all see the United States as increasingly weak.

The Biden Administration brags that it has saved NATO by pouring weapons into European Ukraine. But Europe is starving for fossil-fuel energy, about exhausted with emptying its arsenals in aid to Ukraine, and terrified that Biden is just enough a multilateralist to lead the alliance into a confrontation with Russia, but also so incompetent as to ensure either an economic depression or nuclear standoff.

Mexican President Andrés Manuel López Obrador basks in the publicity of helping an ailing Biden mount stairs, as he brags that 40 million Mexican nationals have entered the United States—the majority of them illegally. He prods Mexican expatriates to vote for Democrats to ensure the border is wide open and a perpetual vehicle for Mexican, not U.S. interests, in ensuring billions of dollars in remittances, defusing social tensions at home, and encouraging them abroad in the United States. Do we help defend the borders of Ukraine because we cannot defend our own? Are 100,000 dead Americans due to imported fentanyl mere collateral damage from open borders?

The more our chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and secretary of defense tour the world, sound off on contemporary strategic issues, or weigh in on domestic politics, the more apprehensive our allies become, wondering how the once-vaunted U.S. Armed Forces have descended into some bizarre woke commissariat.

The international financial community is terrified of $33 trillion in aggregate U.S. debt, a record 130 percent of annual American GDP. It was aghast as the Biden Administration blundered ahead printing money to encourage labor non-participation during a supply chain crisis, inciting inflation, inviting high interest rates, and all but ensuring bank collapses.

The world abroad will tolerate no more lectures from American grandees about the evils of tribal hatred or the benefits of democracy—not when race relations in America are regressing to Balkan-like venom. Anti-democratic rogue regimes indict their former presidents; they put on trial their current political rivals; and they let criminals go free if they serve ideological ends. Now the United States does the same, driven by the Left's paranoid and irrational hatred of Donald Trump, and its eagerness to destroy all customs and traditions to vent its antipathy to all things Trump.

Foreigners assume that downtown Baltimore, Detroit, Los Angeles, Memphis, San Francisco, or Washington are medieval—filthy, unsafe, vacant, and malodorous. Western civilization discovered 2,500 years ago how to remove excrement from its city cores; now it has either lost or forgotten that ability along with the knowledge that crime and disease thrive amid sewage and garbage.

The U.S. media was once the world's gold standard. The New York Times claimed it was the paper of record. Network news was liberally slanted but often fair. Crusading independent journalists often kept government honest. But all that has now become a global laughingstock: ridiculously wrong about "Russian collusion," predictably partisan about "Russian disinformation" and Hunter Biden's laptop, egging on Alvin Bragg's pathetic indictment of candidate and former president Trump, and giddy when an ex-president's home is raided by FBI, or he is tried as a private citizen by a partisan Senate. So as the military, political, financial, economic, and cultural status of the United States reaches a nadir, what is the reaction of a blinkered America?

What remedies are Americans preparing, as they totter on the abyss of disasters comparable to the U.S. Civil War, Great Depression, World War II, or 1960s-style cultural madness?

Marshall Plans to balance budgets? A 600-ship navy? Two more crack army divisions? A continental missile-defense system? A restoration of the cores of American cities? Plans to secure the border? To ratchet up oil and gas production? To drop the racial and sexual tribalism and restore a meritocracy? To reform higher education? To begin charging criminals with the felonies they have committed? A cleaning of the FBI, CIA, Justice Department, and IRS?

Hardly.

- Instead Americans are wondering why a local prosecutor has charged with felonies the first president in history, and currently the leading 2024 presidential candidate, for having a purported liaison 16 years prior and concluding a non-disclosure agreement supposedly to hide it.
- A man pretending to be a woman is cashing in on his media-created persona, winning million-dollar advertising contracts from woke corporations for hawking their beer and sports bras. Do these corporations believe that America's women are so un-endowed that CEOs must hire a man without bosoms to become their national spokesperson for best accommodating cleavage he doesn't have in a competition he doesn't enter?

- America's downtowns are reaching a breaking point of vacancy, vagrancy, and violence that makes life there unsustainable, while the country argues over gender pronouns. As violent crime soars, especially hate crimes, interracial crimes, and inner-city crime, a mostly black woman's championship basketball team stages a media psychodrama of pouting and hurt feelings—as it claims it was “disrespected” by left-wing First Lady Jill Biden and will not go to the White House but prefers instead to be hosted at one of the Obamas' three mansion estates—a duo not heretofore known for welcoming in strangers, especially of the poorer sort.

What else rises to America's fiddling attention as the world burns up abroad?

Students in American universities, whether at Stanford Law School or San Francisco State University, shout obscenities at federal judges or seek to beat up invited speakers. Their disruptions are encouraged by their own deans' silence or active encouragement. The common denominator in both cases is that the disrupters and attackers freely admit they violate university rules and/or the law, and yet assume their ideology and their claims on victimhood exempt them from any consequences for their atrocious conduct. And they are proven right on both counts.

All know that a few expulsions of the elite and pampered lawbreakers would restore sanity to lectures; all know that administrators either side with the culprits or fear their own careers would suffer should they enforce the rules they are charged to uphold

As transgenderism sweeps the country and wins the attention of the White House, the media do their best to hide the facts that the transgendered mass murderer in Nashville wrote a blueprint of how and why she would soon be killing 9-year-olds, that another would-be transgendered mass killer was stopped just in time in Colorado, that another transgender would-be assassin traveled to the home of Supreme Court Justice Kavanaugh to murder him.

To speak the truth that men not just in cross-dress perform sexualized dance skits for audiences that include children, but remain both exempt from legal ramifications and are in hot demand is nearly felonious. Best-selling novelist J. K. Rowling, tennis great Martina Navratilova, and All-American swimmer Riley Gaines—they all cannot go out in public alone without assuming they will be physically attacked by the “peaceful” transgendered community. Their sin? The mere suggestion that those born as biological men cannot declare themselves women and thus assume thereby they are.

So America suffers the sins of omission—squabbling over the nonessential—and commission—losing wars, going broke, ruining its economy, flirting with civil war. We know these are all self-inflicted wounds. But apparently, we believe their remedies are worse than the original maladies. And so we fixate only on the irrelevant that we think we can address while ignoring the existential we know we no longer can solve.

The world is terrified and stunned at the result—and increasingly looking elsewhere to non-American solutions.

The domestic purveyors of disinformation are the real threat to national security

By David Zukerman -- American Thinker

We should not be surprised that former CIA deputy director and acting director Mike Morell was involved in a Deep State ploy to prevent the re-election of President Trump, as noted in this report from Kristina Wong at Breitbart:

Ohio Republican Reps. Jim Jordan, chair of the Weaponization Committee, and Mike Turner, chair of the Intelligence Committee, on Thursday revealed that former CIA Deputy Director Mike Morell testified to Congress that in October 2020, Blinken — who was then a senior adviser on the Biden campaign — reached out to him regarding the New York Post's Hunter Biden laptop story, prompting Morell to write a letter signed by 50 other former intelligence officials suggesting the story was Russian disinformation.

"Based on Morell's testimony, it is apparent that the Biden campaign played an active role in the origins of the public statement, which had the effect of helping to suppress the Hunter Biden story," Jordan and Turner wrote in a letter that revealed Blinken's involvement.

Morell, published an op-ed in The New York Times on August 5, 2016 promoting Hillary Clinton for president — and badmouthing Donald J. Trump as a threat to national security. The following week, the Times gave Morell more space to promote Clinton and badmouth Trump. His first hawking of Hillary pointed to his service at the CIA, as if to claim special expertise in pushing a presidential candidate. Four years later, Morell simply got 50 other intel flacks to lie on behalf of the Biden candidacy. Repeat: to lie to the American people about the issue of foreign — Russian — disinformation.

Yet the source of disinformation is, quite apparently, more within than of foreign origin. That is to say, the usual Deep State suspects, along with their media acolytes, are not to be trusted. But aided by the fake news media, they pulled the wool over the eyes of the American people with their lies about Russia, Russia, Russia, in 2016, 2017, and thereafter, and, as we have just learned, Morell — who probably needed little encouragement from Mr. Blinken — succeeded in discrediting a true New York Post story about Hunter Biden and the contents of his missing laptop. The truth was reported by the New York Post. The fake news was the claim that the Post story was Russian disinformation. And the liars won — installing their puppet in the White House.

In brief, how long are the American people going to be deceived by the lies of the intel committee that serves the Deep State aim of promoting the good life for the insiders, supported by the majority of Americans eking by on the fringes of society?

Rep. Harriet Hageman calls for secretary of state Blinken to be hauled before the "weaponization by government" panel of the House Judiciary Committee. (And thank goodness Rep. Hageman replaced the execrable Liz Cheney as House member from Wyoming.) If Blinken does appear, Republican members of the panel would do well to bear in mind the tendency of the hard left to project their own mindset on others. In this case, where Morell, in August 2016, called candidate Trump a national security threat, the truth is that those who would maintain power by disinformation are the real threat to national security. To employ a metaphor, how long are Republicans in House and Senate going to let the hard left get away with crying "wolf"?
