Government schools were far inferior to the Diocese schools in every way, for example:

- Buildings and grounds appeared run down and in need of basic maintenance
- Over crowded
- Extreme lack of food
- Not enough student desks and chairs
- Staff commitment, especially at secondary school appeared to be marginal as I observed classrooms of students with no teacher, teachers sitting doing nothing, etc.

Some of the many advantages of attending a Diocese school vs a government school:

- Healthy varied diet including fresh produce
- Teaching available around the clock (boarding schools)
- General environment—clean, tidy, pleasant
- Electricity for light at night
- Staff very committed and care about students
- Heads of schools well educated, teachers' qualifications are solid, many with Bachelor's degrees
- Very good student performance

I left with a renewed and validated belief in how well the Diocese' schools are doing under challenging circumstances. Staff members are committed, resourceful, creative, hard-working, and optimistic. As I visited them, I left thinking I would feel very good sending my children to these schools if I lived in Meru. They are struggling to increase enrollments, improve conditions further, and continue to move forward with limited resources. They need our support. Please talk with your parish partners about directing your education gifts to these Diocese owned schools, and keep them in your prayers!
