My Ode to Nature

The breeze brushes against my reddened cheeks:
A caress, soft and slow,
A touch that melts through my skin to cradle my harrowed heart.

I watch the white-tipped peaks rise and fall.
A breath in. A breath out.

The dew, settled on the trees, trickles to the soil beat by beat,
Dusky and soft beneath my feet.

Awe pulls me down.
My hands embrace the tingling cold;
I lean back, legs outstretched as I gaze at the world laid bare before me.

My eyes glisten and gleam with every whisper of the rustling leaves:
The purest lullaby to ever be.
Oh, dear world, thank you for having me,
My gratitude will be without reprieve.
