What is this all About?

Yoga therapy is different than yoga classes or private yoga lessons. Yoga Therapy is governed by a global professional organization, called the international Association of yoga therapist (IAYT). This organization supports assimilating, eastern knowledge and practices that are thousands of years old into verified western science in areas, such as, but not limited to: physical therapy, neuroscience: metabolic medicine to name a few. Yoga therapists have over three years of instructional training in addition to any type of other training or background that qualifies them to be accepted to a school of yoga therapy (this may be yoga training, training as a therapist, health, professional, or other professional).

Dr. Suzanne Paone is a 500 RYT (registered yoga instructor) scientist, business leader, professor at local universities, credentialed, health information management, professional, and a level three qualified IAYT yoga therapist in the process of completing her final requirements following the Optimal State Yoga Therapy three-year program called the final practicum. She offers this course because this discipline of yoga therapy is evidence based and blends complementary techniques that are documented as effective in addressing physical, psychological, emotional, and spiritual challenges related to the effects of systemic, stressors and chronic inflammation.

This program is offered to bring this practice to those who are ready to learn a program of self-transformation. The program assumes nothing in terms of expected preparation; only the humble intention to move in a direction of self-healing. Each session consists of a small manageable nugget of learning in this field (supported by evidence in this field) as well as practical practices offering you tools and techniques to learn in your daily life.
