Groundbreaking Citywide Conference on Ending Gun Violence

The T.R.I.G.G.E.R. Project and Moms Demand Action DC, along with Next Level Vision (NLV) and other co-sponsors, hosted a powerful, groundbreaking conference on June 1. More than 100 people, some gathering in person and others through video conference, joined in addressing real roots of gun violence.

Rather than focusing on victims on the bullet side of a gun incident, as is more usual in gun violence prevention work, this conference turned to victims on the trigger side. Speakers shared honestly about circumstances and choices that led to them picking up a gun, in keeping with the mission of the T.R.I.G.G.E.R. Project: True Reasons I Grabbed A Gun Evolved from Risk.

Speakers and participants included academics, journalists, community leaders, and many individuals with lived experience around gun violence. Linda Harllee Harper, then still quite new as director of DC's Gun Violence Prevention Emergency Operations Center, was on-hand. The Center launched in February, and Ms. Harper began work May 14. The Back Yard Band performed as well, memorializing those lost to gun violence and launching the day of healing, growing and planning.

NLV member Tia Bell founded the T.R.I.G.G.E.R. Project in 2020. Ms. Bell was assisted in conference preparations by Rachel Usdan, then-chair of Moms Demand Action DC.

Ms. Usdan worked tirelessly in recent years on a variety of gun violence awareness and prevention efforts -- from memorial tree plantings to testimony before the DC Council -- including helping to establish NLV. She will continue to work on gun violence prevention from Pittsburgh, PA, where her family has moved for a few years. See also "Wear Orange" story, p.2.

Wear Orange Observances

Moms Demand Action organized virtual events and gatherings in many locations around the country, for "Wear Orange" day this year. The observance is intended to raise awareness about gun violence issues, to mark the birthday of Hadiya Pendleton (June 2, 1997 - Jan 23, 2013), and to memorialize those lost to guns.

Ms. Pendleton was shot to death in a Chicago park, near her home, just days after participating in Obama's Inaugural Parade in DC. The original "Wear Orange" observance in 2013 was organized by the teen's friends in her memory -- orange was her favorite color -- and to highlight, like wearing orange to warn off hunters with guns, the fragility of life amid urban gun violence. Wear Orange has since been adopted by Everytown for Gun Safety and has become a national observance.

Locally, Moms Demand Action-DC held a family-friendly event with food, out-door activities, food, and performances at Oxon Run Park in Southeast

DC. The Wear Orange event on June 12 included recognition of Rachel Usdan, outgoing chair of Moms Demand Action-DC. (See also conference story, p.1)

National Building Museum Hosts Gun Violence Prevention Exhibit

This exhibit, which is now open at the Building Museum here in DC, seeks to preserve individual memories and communicate the magnitude of gun losses in built space, fostering a national healing process that begins with a recognition of the collective loss and its impact on society. Installations in Chicago and the District are the first steps to recognizing the great need for a national, permanent memorial to gun violence victims.

Individual brick spaces hold items of special significance to those who lost loved ones to guns.

Virtual visitors can learn more about the items and their owners via "Moments that Survive," a digital storytelling project -- <https://tinyurl.com/6rcmyuz2>

On-site, the installation also presents these stories and then concludes with a reflection space and resources for survivors and allies.

Experience the exhibit in person. No ticket is required, thanks to the generous support of Everytown for Gun Safety Support Fund. The Gun Violence Memorial Project is located on the Museum's ground floor, next to the Museum Shop. More about the exhibit: <https://www.nbm.org/exhibition/gvmp/>

Samaria Rice Calls for Justice in Tamir Rice's Shooting Death

On Friday, June 25, Tamir Rice would have turned 19. Instead, his mother, Samaria Rice, was in Washington DC, at the US Department of Justice, asking for action in his shooting death.

Tamir was 12 years old, playing in a public park, when he was shot to death by Cleveland (OH) Police seconds after the officers arrived. The officers never stood trial. Ms. Rice and supporters are asking that the case be reopened. On Tamir's birthday, demonstrations were held in Cleveland and DC, to amplify her call.

The DC rally was sponsored by the DC Poor People's Campaign and the National Alliance Against Racist and Political Repression. Participating were organizers Anthony Lorenzo Green, Makia Green (no relation), and April Goggans as well as NLV member Luci Murphy

Ms. Murphy shared this news item along with this letter-writing action to support Samaria Rice's call for justice in this case:

Image Description: Image includes an artist's rendering -- attributed to @Sarahrot -- of Tamir Rice, a smiling 12-year-old Black child. Text: "Tamir Rice was shot and killed by Cleveland Police when he was just 12 years old. Officers Timothy Loehmann and Frank Garmback have never stood trial. We demand justice for Tamir."

"We're going to instill the right kind of confidence in our people and take our community back square mile by square mile"

- Timothy Dawkins-El, 2013

NLV's vision is to change the culture of our community from gun violence to love. We are working with all organizations who are willing to work in unity and share the responsibility of taking our generation to the next level vision.

Our mission is to build a networking partnership with our community leaders. To form and inform our families of available resources and programs. We want to inspire and encourage leaders to organize, strategize and mobilize in unity and love.

NLV has been the inspiration and creation of this organization to honor the life and legacy of Timothy D. Dawkins-EL and many other families that have loss children to gun violence. Timothy was 24 years young at the time of his transition and full of life and love for his family, friends and community. Regrettably, his life was stolen from us on August 21st, 2013 ten days before his 25th birthday. Timothy was murdered in Southeast DC by a stray bullet (9mm Glock) as he walked home to charge his cell phone with a friend.
