

OM Interactive Motion-Activated Projection System

With all of the horrific news about nursing homes emerging during the Covid-19 pandemic, not to mention the hardships of isolation, boredom and loneliness that seniors often experience, we were heartened to read about a group of care homes in rural England that have just received a fabulous piece of technology.

It can do an amazing job of engaging, stimulating and calming older adults, including those with dementia.

That technology is a state-of-the-art OM Interactive (OMI) motion-activated projection system, part of the company's innovative, groundbreaking and award-winning sensory technology.

After a year of fund-raising, residents just received the system, which can beam moving images, sounds and music onto floors, tables and even beds. Users interact with the projected applications, receiving many physical, cognitive and emotional benefits.

"The projector has already brought a lot of joy and positivity in light of what is going on in the world at the moment," said Joanne Monaghan, head of care and nursing and registered manager at Askham Hall and Askham House, in the report in The Cambs Times.

"It's a piece of equipment the staff have wanted for a long time."

The technology comes from Britain-based OMI and is represented in British Columbia by East West Medical Products Ltd. It is being used in a growing number of retirement and long-term-care facilities.

Please let us know if you are a facility or know of one that has used the OM interactive technology during these isolating times.
