

Okey-dokey, here's blog number two. Did you know it takes 50 muscle pairs and hundreds of nerves to swallow? However, it only takes one muscle to blink. Now, who taught you to do either one of those? Swallowing food is essential to our survival. But nobody taught you how to do it. Science will say it is an instinct that you were born with. What does that really mean? Who gave you the instinct? Is it any wonder the Bible says we are fearfully and wonderfully made? I mean did you sit around one day as an infant wringing your hands, worried to death that you wouldn't learn how to swallow in time before you starved to death? Of course not! That is silly. You were born with the ability to swallow already built into your DNA. Isn't God wonderful? Maybe we should take a little more time every day to see the wonder in God's creation. Let's face it, the ability to swallow isn't even the most amazing thing that you will see before breakfast. Did you notice that the sun came up today? Did you notice that the oxygen level in the air is exactly the right proportion for you to breathe and survive? Did you notice that our planet spins at exactly the right rate? Did you notice that gravity is exactly right so as to keep everything working in nature as it should, yet not so strong that everything is crushed? I didn't. I woke up, and stumbled around until I found the coffee maker. God's creation is full of amazement and wonder. And we are the crown jewel of it. Who knows what today will bring? Maybe I'll figure out why God created ticks today!
