Idaho finishes elk removal project to curb ag damage

By BRAD CARLSON
Capital Press

Idaho Fish and Game has completed a two-phase project to remove 109 elk from private agricultural land in the Big Willow Creek drainage near Emmett in the state's southwest.

USDA Wildlife Services, under contract with Fish and Game, killed and removed 75 elk in July, according to a Fish and Game news release. All meat has been processed and is being distributed to people in need.

Fish and Game staff in May captured 34 elk and moved them to the state's northern panhandle region.

Herd management challenge

The project, announced in January, was pursued to reduce a nonmigratory year-round elk herd that has caused sustained agricultural damage, according to the release. Fish and Game and USDA Wildlife Services worked with landowners.

The project followed five years of work by landowners and Fish and Game to reduce damage claims using conventional tools such as hunter harvest and non-lethal hazing approaches.

This year's project was pursued after conventional approaches "proved unable to keep pace with a resident herd that almost never leaves private property," according to the release.

Over the past five years, the nonmigratory herd grew to about 350 animals. Hunters in 2025 harvested about 150 elk on these properties, yet the herd caused more than $1 million combined in crop damage to five landowners. The landowners hold about 42,000 acres overall, including 6,700 irrigated acres.

"With damage recurring year after year and conventional tools exhausted, taking no further action was not viable," according to the release.

"Managing elk on private agricultural land requires balancing our responsibilities to wildlife, to hunters, and to the landowners who live with these animals every day," said Josh Royse, Fish and Game southwest regional supervisor. "When that balance becomes skewed, we're compelled to act. These decisions were incredibly difficult, and our goal throughout was a durable solution that provides relief to landowners while managing the public's elk responsibly."

General season hunting will continue in the area this fall, and landowner permission hunts remain available on participating private land.

Food donation

All elk killed in the project tested negative for Chronic Wasting Disease and were promptly field dressed, stored, and transported in refrigerated trailers to meat processors, according to the release.

About 9,500 pounds of meat were donated to the nonprofit Idaho Hunters Feeding the Hungry, which has moved wild-game protein into Idaho food pantries since 2002.

"Our part in this is a simple one: making sure none of this goes to waste, and that it helps feed Idahoans who need it," executive director Jeff Schroeder said. "As a hunter, I recognize that this is a difficult situation and understand the passion that surrounds the management of Idaho's wildlife. But I am just as passionate about our mission to transform donations of Idaho's wild game meat into nutritious food for the hungry, and I commend Fish and Game for enabling us to do that with these elk."

Protein from red meat is the most expensive and least-supplied nutrient in food pantries across the state, he said. This project and partnership with Fish and Game will provide nearly 40,000 servings to food-insecure Idaho families.

Distribution of the elk meat to local food pantries has started and ultimately will impact Adams, Washington, Payette, Gem, Canyon and Boise counties.

Opportunities to increase supply include hunters, or ranchers who have landowner permits, donating all or part of a legally harvested animal, Schroeder said in an interview. He also is president of Jerome Food Ministry, which operates a food pantry in Jerome.

Fresh potato exports defy market slump

By BRAD CARLSON
Capital Press

U.S. potato exports in the July 2025-June 2026 marketing year totaled 2.99 metric tons valued at $2.17 billion.

Volume on a fresh-equivalent basis declined 4.8% while value was down 6.3%, Potatoes USA reported. The national marketing organization used U.S. Department of Commerce Foreign Trade Division data.

The fresh category posted growth of 14.9% in volume and 6.8% in value. Fresh potatoes comprised 23.6% of export compared to 19.6% in the year-earlier period.

Frozen potato products remained the biggest export category, accounting for 46.3% of volume.

More than half of U.S. potato export value in 2025-26 came from Mexico, Canada and Japan combined, according to Potatoes USA. Metric tonnage was 671,567 from Mexico, 642,330 from Canada and 624,391 from Japan.

"While the overall U.S. export results reported by Potatoes USA reflect a challenging global marketplace, there are encouraging signs," Ross Johnson, Idaho Potato Commission vice president of retail and international, told Capital Press. He pointed to the nearly 15% increase in fresh potato export volume.

"Idaho is building on that momentum, and our state's export results have continued to increase even as total U.S. potato-product exports declined," he said.

Potato exports from the state during the July 2025-June 2026 period increased by 16% from a year earlier, Johnson said.

"That growth demonstrates the value of sustained, market-specific programs that build demand for Idaho potatoes," he said. IPC offices around the world "give us an edge" and "we are excited for the continued growth we will see in this coming year."

The commission is concentrating its international efforts in markets where it sees strong opportunities for long-term growth, including Mexico, Taiwan and Malaysia, Johnson said.

Each market requires a different strategy, "so we work closely with importers, retailers, foodservice operators, culinary professionals, and educational institutions to communicate what distinguishes Idaho potatoes," he said. Quality, versatility and strong consumer recognition are among distinguishing factors.

The national export figures provide important context but do not tell the entire story for every producing state or market, Johnson said.
