IDAHO EDITION

Hipp is bullish on Idaho, East Oregon hops, onions, fruit

By BRAD CARLSON
Capital Press

Cali Hipp sees opportunities for specialty crop producers in Idaho and Eastern Oregon.

"One of the biggest opportunities I see is continuing to strengthen the identity and visibility of Idaho-grown and eastern Oregon-grown agricultural products," said Hipp, who began serving as executive director of six crop organizations in June. She succeeded Candi Fitch, who retired.

"There are incredible growers and agricultural businesses here," Hipp said. "We have an opportunity to better tell their stories and help consumers and buyers understand what makes our growing region unique."

Cali Hipp leads six specialty crop organizations in Idaho and eastern Oregon. (Cali Hipp/Contributed)

Idaho-Eastern Oregon Onion Committee

"The Idaho-Eastern Oregon onion industry is a major part of our region's agricultural economy, and maintaining a strong and reliable market for our growers and shippers remains a priority" for the federal marketing order group, she said. "Promotion, market development, research and maintaining the strong reputation of Idaho-eastern Oregon onions are all important components of that work."

Idaho Hop Growers Commission

"Idaho is a significant hop-producing state, and there is a great opportunity to continue building awareness around Idaho-grown hops," Hipp said. "Research is also an important focus, particularly as growers look at plant health, varieties, production practices and maintaining exceptional quality."

Idaho Hop Growers Association

"The association provides an opportunity for growers to come together as an industry," she said. "Communication, collaboration and providing growers with a forum to discuss issues affecting their farms and businesses are important parts of its role."

Idaho Apple Commission

"Idaho has a proud apple-growing history, and our focus is on continuing to build recognition for Idaho-grown apples and the growers behind them," Hipp said. "Promotion, market development and strengthening the Idaho apple identity are important priorities for the commission."

Idaho Cherry Commission

"Cherries have a relatively short and exciting marketing window, so creating awareness around the Idaho cherry season is especially important," she said. "We want consumers to recognize when Idaho cherries are available and seek them out during the season.

Idaho-Oregon Fruit & Vegetable Association

"The association is focused on bringing the broader produce industry together," Hipp said. "It provides a place for growers, shippers and allied businesses to collaborate on shared issues, develop relationships and strengthen the agricultural industry of our region."

Working together

Collaboration among the organizations' members is another opportunity.

"Although the crops and markets are different, many of the issues affecting agriculture are shared," Hipp said. Labor, transportation, research, trade, regulation and market development are examples, and "there is a lot of value in working together where it makes sense."

Agriculture continues to face pressure from rising production costs, labor availability and costs, transportation, regulation, trade and changing markets, she said.

"Growers are operating businesses in an environment where many of those factors are outside of their control," Hipp said. "One of the important roles these organizations play is making sure the realities facing growers are understood by policymakers, buyers and the public. Having a strong, collective industry voice is increasingly important."

She is based in Parma, Idaho. She grew up in Caldwell, attended the University of Oregon on a golf scholarship and holds an MBA from Boise State University. She previously worked for TMN Events, Mission Critical Group and Agri Beef.

"I have always appreciated the community, lifestyle and opportunities we have here," Hipp said. "Having the opportunity to now represent industries and communities that are such an important part of the region where I grew up makes this role particularly rewarding."

Since stepping into her new role, she has been impressed with the knowledge, history and pride within the respective industries.

"Many of the people I work with come from families that have been involved in agriculture for generations, and there is an incredible amount of expertise represented on our boards and committees," Hipp said.

Intermountain Packing and Roman Cattle found in default

By MATEUSZ PERKOWSKI
Capital Press

A federal judge has determined the owner of a defunct Idaho slaughter facility has defaulted in a lawsuit brought by dairies who claimed they weren't paid for cattle.

In 2024, several dairies in Idaho and Washington accused Intermountain Packing of Idaho Falls of failing to pay them $2 million for culled cows delivered to the plant.

Intermountain Packing countersued the dairy farms, arguing they continued delivering low-quality cattle to the facility even after being asked to stop.

Earlier this year, however, Intermountain Packing shut down and laid off 150 employees, citing an "abrupt and unforeseeable financial crisis" that resulted in the company's "immediate inability to meet payroll obligations."

Later, attorneys representing Intermountain Packing, which is owned by Sanin Mirvic of the American Farmers Network, withdrew from the litigation with the dairy farms, saying they'd stopped getting paid by the company.

Now, the dairies who filed the lawsuit — Dry Creek Dairies and Idaho Magic Milk of Twin Falls, Idaho, and Washington Agri-Investments of Yakima, Wash. — have persuaded a federal judge to enter a default order against Intermountain Packing.

The defendant has failed to notify the court about who would be representing it in the case and is "therefore in default," the judge said.

The same judge has also entered a default order against Mirvic and the American Farmers Network in a separate case involving the Roman Cattle Co., which sought to withhold nearly $11 million in payments for cattle from the Producers Livestock Marketing Association of North Salt Lake, Utah.

In that lawsuit, Roman Cattle alleged that the defendant had charged excessive commissions and failed to abide by the terms of a livestock procurement deal.

Producers Livestock Marketing Association countersued the company, denying it had breached the agreement and arguing that Mirvic, the owner of Roman Cattle, had failed to wire money owed for cattle as promised.

The attorneys representing Mirvic and Roman Cattle also withdrew from that case earlier this year, citing non-payment, and the judge has now entered a default order because the court wasn't notified of who would replace them.
