Little suspends Idaho dyed-diesel inspections

By BRAD CARLSON
Capital Press

Idaho Gov. Brad LIttle on Oct. 9 signed an executive order that suspends state inspections related to dyed diesel fuel.

The order, which follows a similar recent directive by President Donald Trump, is intended to reduce regulatory burdens on farmers and ranchers during harvest season, according to a news release.

Dyed diesel is commonly used for agricultural purposes and is subject to different state and federal requirements than fuel used for on-road purposes. Little's order provides temporary relief from state inspection requirements while the state evaluates how its policies compare with those of other states.

The order directs the Idaho State Police and state transportation department to suspend inspection efforts conducted under state law for 30 days while the agencies review existing inspection policies and procedures. The review will consider how other states approach dyed diesel enforcement and will result in recommendations to the governor for "efficient, effective and practical inspection practices," according to the release.

The order will remain in effect for 30 calendar days unless rescinded or extended by a subsequent order. The order does not exempt people or businesses from other applicable federal laws, the laws of other states or warranty requirements for their vehicles.

"Idaho farmers and ranchers work hard to feed our families, our country and the world," Little said in the release. "President Trump has made cutting red tape a priority, and Idaho is doing the same. We will continue looking for ways to give our farmers, ranchers, and working men and women on the road more freedom to do what they do best."

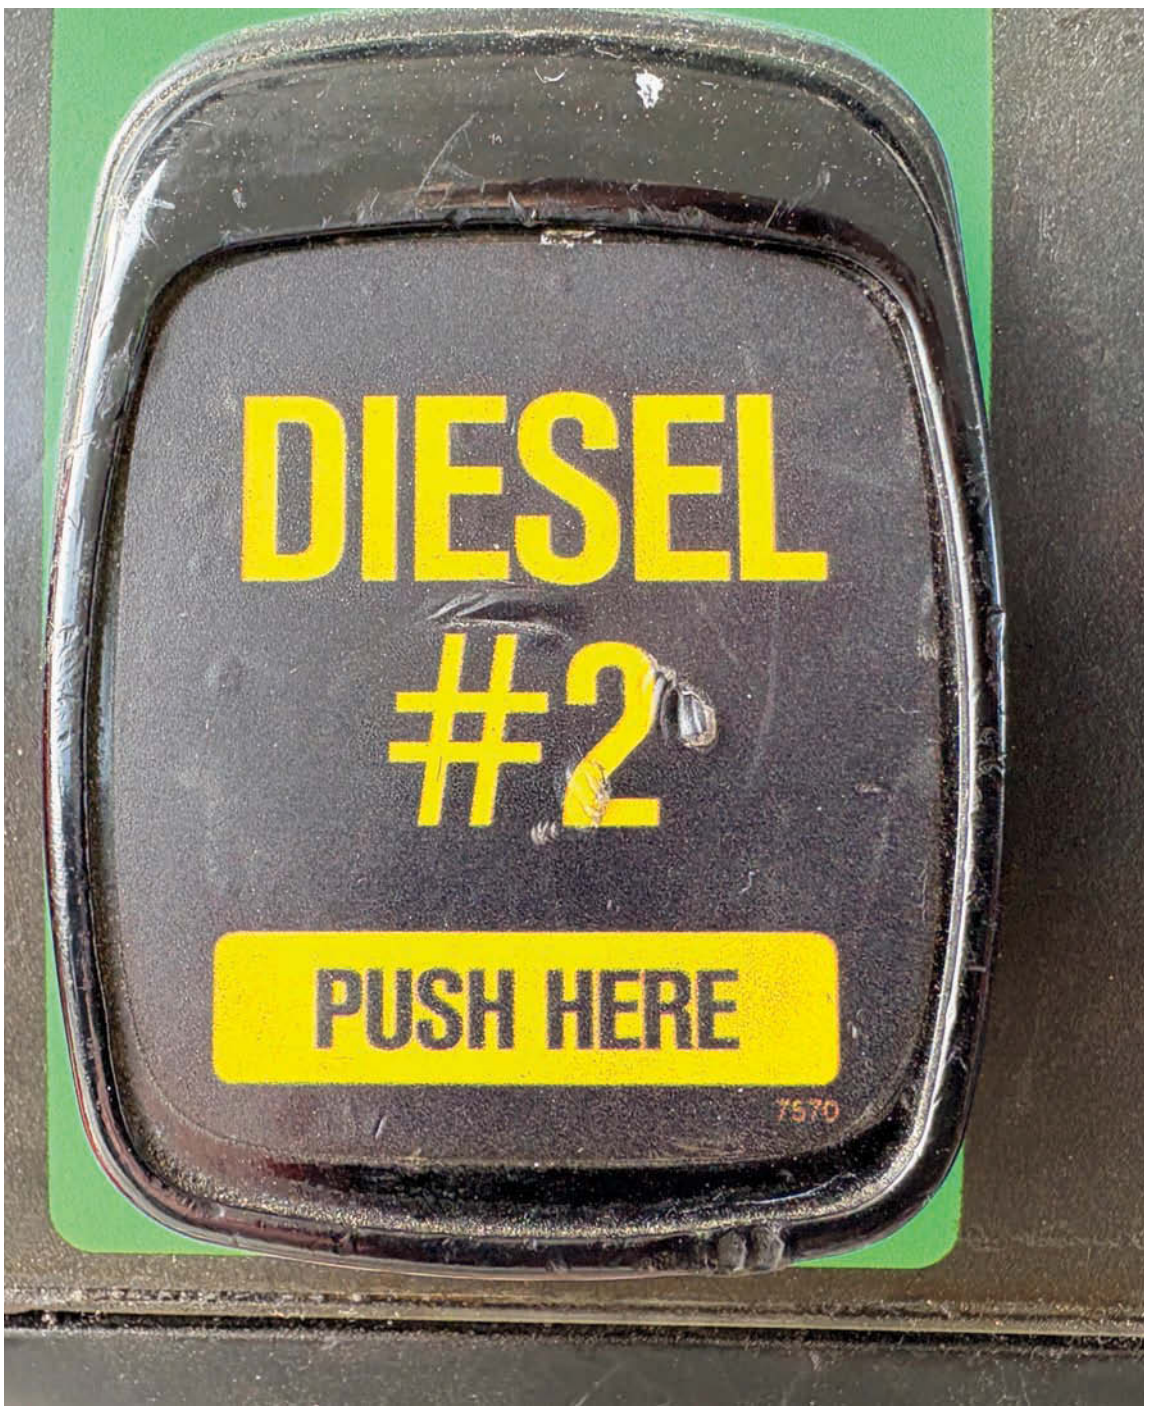

The order follows Trump's directive to cut red tape and reduce unnecessary regulatory burdens on American farmers, ranchers and businesses.

Little is building on that effort in Idaho by "taking immediate action to give producers relief during harvest and reviewing state policies to identify opportunities for further common-sense reforms," according to the release.

"Our farmers and ranchers work long hours to put food on our tables and strengthen Idaho's economy," Idaho House Speaker Mike Moyle said. "They deserve a government that supports them. Suspending these inspections while the state reviews its policies is a practical approach that puts common sense first and gives Idaho producers one less thing to worry about during harvest."

"Idaho farmers and ranchers are facing high costs across the board, and expensive diesel is adding to the pressure during harvest," Idaho Senate President Pro Tempore Kelly Anthon said in the release.

"This order provides some immediate relief while giving the state time to review these requirements and find a practical approach that supports our producers without adding unnecessary costs or red tape."

UI names Toelle 4-H youth development director

By BRAD CARLSON
Capital Press

The University of Idaho hired Andy Toelle as director of UI Extension 4-H Youth Development.

He will be based in Moscow. He starts in the job Nov. 2.

Toelle has more than three decades of 4-H experience. He currently serves as regional specialized 4-H agent with the University of Florida Institute of Food and Agricultural Sciences Extension 4-H Youth development program.

Early in his new job with UI, he plans to focus on listening and learning about the program, according to a UI news release. He credits UI Extension with strong club programming and creative offerings such as Learn Everywhere with 4-H, a program through which youth can earn high school credit for certain projects.

Toelle

"My vision is that we all work together towards making the best better," Toelle said. "We're working together to help these youth out, to help our volunteers be successful and to help our educators be successful."

His new appointment marks a return to Idaho. He served as a 4-H Extension educator with UI in Bonneville County from 1992 to 1994.

Onboarding and training new faculty were among Toelle's favorite duties while holding several positions with Florida 4-H, according to the release. He developed Day One Mentoring, a program that paired new hires with an experienced faculty member through the new employee's first year. He has also worked closely with 4-H volunteers and has helped expand the program abroad.

He was part of a team of Florida 4-H leaders that partnered with the nonprofit Lignum Vitae to bring 4-H to the Bahamas in 2010. He was on another team of Florida 4-H leaders that traveled to U.S. Air Force and Navy bases across Europe and the Caribbean, training youth development program staff to deliver 4-H programs.

Toelle holds a bachelor's degree in psychology and a master's degree in family and child development from Auburn University, and a doctorate in agricultural education and communication with an emphasis on leadership and extension from the University of Florida.
