Re: Help More Women and Girls Take Flight

Hello Friends!,

For many women and girls, the dream of becoming a pilot begins with one powerful realization: I belong in the cockpit. What often stands between that dream and the first flight is not talent or determination. It is the cost of training, limited access to aviation resources, and the absence of a community to guide the way.

Girls Love to Fly is a nonprofit aviation organization creating that path. Through education, mentorship, scholarships, ground school, discovery flights, flight training, written test assistance, and checkride support, we help aspiring pilots take meaningful steps toward earning their wings.

The impact reaches far beyond the airplane. Flight training develops confidence, discipline, leadership, and sound decision making. When a woman discovers what she can accomplish at the controls, that confidence follows her into her career, family, and community.

Will you help the next woman take flight?

Your tax deductible contribution can create immediate, practical impact:

Gift	What Your Support Helps Make Possible
$100	Helps provide training materials or ground school support
$250	Helps fund a discovery flight and a first step into aviation
$750	Helps offset written testing, checkride preparation, or practical test expenses
$8,000	Provides significant scholarship support toward private pilot training
$20,000+	Creates major scholarships and expands aviation education for women and girls

Supporters contributing $5,000 or more may be recognized as Girls Love to Fly partners on our website and selected outreach materials. Corporate sponsorships, donated aviation resources, and in kind support are also welcome.

Please make your gift at girlslovetofly.com/donate or contact us to discuss a scholarship or corporate partnership. Every contribution helps move a future pilot closer to the runway.

Thank you for believing in this mission and in the women and girls who are ready to soar.

With gratitude,

Jamie Lou Waterhouse
