FR020		3								Hotchkiss H-35 or H-39 with three vehicles. Most Battalions de Chars de Combat (BCC) were equipped with Renault R-35 tanks, although two had Hotchkiss H-35 tanks. Likewise, the Divisions Cuirassée (DC) had Hotchkiss H-39 tanks. The French initially equipped their light tanks with the old 37mm SA-18 gun used in the First World War	3			E	25.00
FR151		5								Laffly W15 TCC 47mm Portes Contain one Laffly W15 TCC tank hunter with crew & AA MG.	1			E	15.00
FR300		13								Panhard AMD-35 The French designed their Automitrailleuse de Découverte (AMD), Deep Reconnaissance Armoured Cars, to advance far ahead of their division to locate the enemy and report their movements. As they were expected to operate with little support apart from their own motorcycles, the AMD needed to be capable of defending itself. The Panhard AMD mobile 1935 has a two-man turret armed with the excellent 25mm SA-35 gun, a shortened version of the towed 25mm SA-34 anti-tank gun that fires higher-powered ammunition to maintain its performance.	1			E	15.00
FR420		5								S307L Truck Includes two one piece resin S307L trucks with Driver & Seated passengers. When the French Army decided to establish the Division légère mécanique or Light Mechanised Division (DLM) during 1932, one vital element needed for its success was the ability to transport infantry on a grand scale. Therefore, a tender requesting submissions for a design capable of carrying ten men and their equipment was issued.	2			E	18.00
FR702		1								Fusiliers Platoon with one Command Rifle Team, one VB team & six Rifle/MG teams. The section de fusiliers-voltigeurs (fusiliers-voltigeurs platoon) is another example of the French infantry's perfect organisation for trench warfare.			37	E	30.00
FR705		1								Mortar Platoon with four mortars with crew, Observer team & Command Rifle team. Almost every mortar used by every nation in the Second World War (and snail) was essentially derived from the outstanding Brandt mle 27/31 (introduced in 1927 and updated in 1931) mortar. Even its 81.4mm calibre became the European standard used by both Allied and Axis forces.	4	18		E	20.00
FR0100		1		Y						French Artillery Group (Greatcoat) Includes two Command teams, one Staff team, two Observer teams, four Artillery piece crews, four Anti-tank gun crews, four Small bases & one Medium base.			50	E	25.00
