I Love to Read Month

February kicks off I love to read month. Throughout the month of February we will encourage various ways to engage with literacy and the written word. I encourage you and your families to take some time this month to dive into good books, look at different types of poetry, or even look at magazines geared toward kids. Sharing literature and reading to your children has so many social and educational benefits, plus it is a great way to spend time in these cold winter months. I will try to highlight some great resources for you and your families this month. Happy reading!

Check out "Reading Rockets for Parents". This website provides tips for reading with your child(ren) at home. It also has interactive features such as Reading Adventure Packets with activities tied to picture books, a reading and writing SOS where educators answer parent questions about reading and learning to read, and lists of books, poetry, and other literature your children might like. We hope you find some fun things to do here!
