

Author's educational book endorsed by borough mayor

A Northwood resident has released a new book for children after being inspired by the struggles of home schooling during lockdown.

Local educational author Helen J. Bailey created The Bumper Book of Double Learning to teach those aged between eight and 13 the double learning technique, which aims to teach readers two pieces of knowledge at the same time.

The book has already been endorsed by the Mayor of Hillingdon councillor Becky Haggar, who met with Helen to find out more about the book.

Helen spoke to NORTHWOOD&RUISLIPNEWS about her inspiration behind the book: "I decided to write this book after witnessing the many frustrations that parents encounter when trying to help educate their children.

"Whether it's for SATs, 11 Plus or home schooling, parents spend too much money on books that have no teaching and learning; they're just basic revision.

"I wanted to create something that children could learn from at home. Over the last seven years, I've worked with parents and children to ensure that everything they need is in one book. The Bumper Book of Double Learning will enable every child to reach their full potential."
