

The Bugaloos, Off-Stage, On

NEW YORK —The four British-born teen-age musicians featured as "The Bugaloos" on the Saturday morning comedy-musical fantasy series are tuned in on the same wave length when working before the cameras.

But when they're off-stage on their own time, their hobbies take over.

Caroline Ellis (Joy) loves to swim and ride horseback. "Riding horses is great fun," she says, "and one of these days I am going to learn how to jump them." Caroline also reads novels and spends much of her time writing short stories.

John Philpott's (Courage) favorite games are darts and billiards and he is good enough to win a lot of dinners and free evenings at the club. For exercise he swims and plays football (English style). "This American football," he explains, "is something a kid has to learn from early childhood. As for me, I'll take soccer."

Wayne Laryea (Harmony), the youngest Bugaloo, likes to read and write poetry. He sees all the movies he can and tries to memorize film and storyline techniques. His main interest lies in preparing himself for work behind the cameras instead of in front of them.

John McIndoe (I.Q.) plays the guitar at almost every opportunity. He hopes to develop a Bugaloos "sound" different from that of any other group. He collects stamps and antique cameras and spends every free moment investigating the marvels of California.
