Dried mealworms are the larvae of the darkling beetle (scientifically known as Tenebrio Molitor) that have been dried.

For chickens specifically, mealworms are valued for their high protein content which can boost feather growth during molting seasons. They can also improve the egg quality for layers. They can complement the chickens' diet by providing a natural source of amino acid which mimics what they might forage for in the wild. Overall, they improve the health of the chickens, making it part of a balanced diet.

Mealworms can be a good treat to ducks, turtles, and wild birds, making it a versatile treat for your backyard animals.
