Global Peace Secretariat Invites You to Observe 1 Minute of Silence for Global Peace

On November 11th, 1918, at exactly 11 a.m., the guns fell silent across the battlefields of World War I. An armistice signed earlier that day brought an end to one of the most devastating wars in history. This pivotal moment marked not just the end of hostilities but also the beginning of hope for a more peaceful world. By commemorating this historic day, we are given the opportunity to reflect on the essence of peace and our shared responsibility to maintain it across the globe.

The Global Peace Secretariat invites people from all corners of the world to join in observing one minute of silence for global peace on November 11th at 11 a.m. Participating in this simple yet powerful gesture allows us to pause amid our daily routines, offering a moment of tranquility and reflection. It's a call to each of us to meditate on inner peace and visualize a more harmonious world.

Envision this—people in diverse communities, cities, and countries pausing simultaneously, forming a unifying wave of peaceful energy. Such a moment can help foster understanding and solidarity among people from different cultures and backgrounds. Encouraging this global practice can inspire future generations to prioritize peace and cooperation in their lives and in global interactions.

To make this initiative a worldwide success, we urge schools, businesses, governmental and non-governmental organizations, and all citizens to participate in this act of unity and reflection. Promote the event within your networks and communities, and encourage others to join. Witness and be part of a global movement fostering deep reflection, compassion, and a shared commitment to peace.
