Let's Talk Some Trash

By Christopher Lane

On a recent rainy Sunday evening, I donned a jacket to take out the garbage for the next day's pickup. After opening the garage door, I grabbed our large brown trash container to wheel outside, but found it a bit light. Flipping open the lid to take a peak inside, I discovered only one small bag lying within the cavernous space. With so little garbage, I decided to give the collection guys a break and let them skip my house, opting to wait until next week when the container would be more filled.

However, this being the "Even" week, it was also time to take out our two recycle bins. Turning to them, I once again marveled at how much plastic, paper and cans my wife and I were able to stuff into those containers every two weeks! Fortunately, such material is lightweight and I was quickly able to carry both bins to the curb.

As often experienced in the over ten years that we've been recycling, the amount of trash generated from recyclable materials was again considerably more than what went into the regular garbage. Multiply those two recycle bins of debris by 26 collection periods a year and it becomes clear that we saved our local landfill a LOT of perfectly good material that can be reused for another purpose. That's just from our house...the Community Connector now reaches well over 36,000 homes!

For the third consecutive year, I'm using this opportunity to remind our readers about Earth Day, observed on April 22...ironically falling on a Monday, which is probably a garbage collection day for many of you. Earth Day began in 1970 as millions of people rallied in support of higher environmental standards. The EPA was created that year and the Clean Air, Clean Water and Endangered Species Acts were passed in 1972-73. Since going global in 1990, more than one billion people in over 190 countries participate in Earth Day activities every year.

For 2019, Earth Day Network, the world's largest recruiter to the environmental movement, has named their campaign "Protect Our Species". Per its website at www.earthday.org, they state "Unfortunately, human beings have irrevocably upset the balance of nature...the rapid extinction of species in our world today is the result of human activity." One of the ways we upset this balance is with landfills that take up space that could otherwise be a wildlife habitat. Landfills give off harmful emissions including methane and produces toxic slime that harms the environment. Wildlife also eats litter from landfills, often dying as a result.

Of course, the most harmful products in our garbage are from plastic. Plastic pollution and its literally forever accumulation is prevalent not only in our landfills, but throughout our planet's lands, oceans and waterways. It's an incredibly huge problem that won't go away until we become more proactive by at least recycling.

If you're not now recycling, I'm again asking that you begin. Arrange for it right now. The cost is only about five dollars per month. It's worth it...and I promise, you'll feel good about contributing less to our landfills, while absolutely helping to save our species and our planet. It really is that important.

The Practice of Happiness (Part 2)

By Linda Martin

Following the theme from the March issue on happiness, this month we focus on how to increase our happiness, regardless of genetic tendencies or events in our lives. Thomas Jefferson included “the pursuit of happiness” as one of the three inalienable rights in the Declaration of Independence, with happiness thought to mean prosperity, thriving and well-being. Many wise people have tried to define happiness and what we can do to be happy. According to the Dalai Lama XIV, “Happiness is not something ready made. It comes from your own actions.”

Fortunately, numerous studies from the field of Positive Psychology and other social science researchers have provided strong data on what makes happy people happy and identified ways to improve happiness.

In his article “The Secret of Happiness Revealed by Harvard Study”, author George Bradt discussed consistent findings of long-term studies that identified factors affecting happiness:

- choosing to be happy with whatever you do
- cultivating and maintaining close, positive relationships
- taking care of yourself physically, emotionally and financially
- doing good for others
- doing things you’re “good at”

Another website (www.pursuit-of-happiness.org), devoted to distilling scientific information on happiness, describes these “7 Habits of Happy People”:

Express your heart: Share personal feelings and be open to hearing others.

Cultivate kindness: Care for others on a consistent basis with kindness gestures.

Keep moving and eat well: Maintain exercise and good eating habits, get enough sleep, and go out into the sunshine.

Find your flow: This is a joyful state in which we’re focused on a challenging goal or performing an activity well-suited to our skills and interests and we “lose ourselves and track of time.” (concept defined by Mihaly Csikszentmihaly, 1990)

Discovering meaning: Discover a higher purpose to our lives.

Discover and use your strengths: Find our unique strengths and qualities and use them for a purpose greater than our own good.

Treasure gratitude, mindfulness, and hope: Optimism, mindfulness and gratitude form perhaps the strongest base for finding true happiness.

Next month we’ll continue with “The Practice of Happiness (Part Three)” with a focus on ways to put these ideas into our daily lives.

Reluctantly, the duo tries to become a trio, but with very mixed—and surprising—results.
