It's Not a Race

By Christopher Lane

Returning recently from Florida, we left I-95 to merge onto I-26 toward Greenville. With the speed limit displayed as 70 mph, I set the cruise control for 74 and continued toward home. That's when I noticed the velocity of the cars hurtling past us. I was almost the slowest guy on the road, even while technically speeding! I think the only vehicles I may have passed were a couple of dilapidated pick-ups and an orange '69 VW Beetle. In the meantime, almost everyone else was flying by at a minimum of 80 mph, often considerably faster. I'm talking 90-95 mph, with a couple crazies who made them look like turtles. I-385 was less insane, but still pretty fast...not a lot of attention being paid to the posted limits. Whether the speed was 65 or 55, many drivers were still running 10, 20 or more miles over the limit.

Most of you are aware of this problem... and may even be contributing to it. This dangerous situation becomes even more apparent during morning and evening rush hour traffic, especially when traveling to and from downtown Greenville.

Of course, we're not alone. Many major cities around the country have a problem with speeding. Having traveled around the country, I feel that Miami, Los Angeles, Chicago, New York City and Atlanta are among the worst. But Greenville is giving them quite a contest...and the statistics prove it. South Carolina ranks among the highest in the country for traffic fatalities...almost double the national average...and Greenville County is among the worst in the state. Speeding and driving under the influence are the two top reasons for these unfortunate numbers. Not yielding the right of way, ignoring signs and signals, road rage and distractions like cell phones are other causes for deadly incidents.

An overall increase in our stress levels likely has something to do with all of this. People often merge those tensions into their driving habits. But with an increase of faster, more powerful automobiles on the road, it often seems like a race out there. Tailgating other drivers to bully them out of the way, weaving in and out of lanes and other cars, zipping around those in the passing lane only to cut back in a short while later...we've all witnessed this reckless, dangerous stuff far too frequently.

On behalf of those of us who are trying to drive in a relatively safe manner, I'm asking some of you to please slow down. If we both travel ten miles down I-385 into Greenville and I go 60 while you zip by me at 80, you're only going to save 150 seconds. That's no reason to endanger others. It's NOT a race. Breathe...stay relaxed...enjoy the drive. Keep a respectable speed, maintain a safe distance and just drive responsibly. We'll all appreciate your courtesy.

Important note: Beginning with this issue, the Community Connector will be doubling our distribution in Greenville County as we begin mailing to over 73,000 homes bi-monthly. The continued encouragement from our readers and growing interest from prospective advertisers has provided us with solid momentum to move forward with our plans for further growth.

We certainly thank you for your wonderful support!

WELCOME TO HAPPINESS

ENJOY YOUR STAY

By Linda Martin

This issue focuses on simple, practical strategies to be in a state of happiness and contentment more often. This in no way means to ignore our real emotions of sadness, loss, frustration or loneliness, but rather to minimize time and energy spent in worry, anger, and negative thinking.

How we view things profoundly affects our emotions. We know that states of happiness are transient and unstable. So while recognizing and experiencing all our emotions is good, we can avoid being stuck in an unhealthy negative thinking loop. Writer Corrie ten Boom states, "Worry doesn't remove tomorrow's sorrow...it removes today's strength."

Worry is a thinking habit that has real emotional consequences. It is possible however, to change your thoughts and actions, thereby changing the negative emotions. We can identify positive emotion amplifiers and use these on a daily basis. Here are some quick and easy things to do to improve our happiness:

- Consciously smile more frequently at people and to yourself in the mirror.
- Change your negative thought or worry into something neutral or positive. Try saying to yourself, "on the other hand..." or "this thought is not true" or "I'm worrying about something that hasn't even happened & may not."
- Act yourself into feeling differently: Dance to music, sing, pay special attention to your pet, remember something funny that you or someone did, doodle, create something, laugh, move around...stretch, take a short walk, jog in place, watch something inspiring or fascinating.
- Write down three things for which you are grateful or three good things that happened today; send a note to someone you appreciate.
- Savor positive experiences: Notice a bird or a flower, taste or smell a favorite food, observe a sunrise or sunset. Savor the moments.
- Step or sit outside and close your eyes: Notice all the sounds, the feel of the air or breeze, the various smells. Then open your eyes and notice things up close or in the distance. Pay attention for about five minutes.
- Surround yourself with pleasant sensations such as a scented candle, music, a flower or something simple from nature.
- Turn off devices and extraneous noise and sit quietly.
- Talk to someone who is positive or merely notice someone who seems especially friendly or helpful; engage with a friend or loved one.
- Keep photos associated with positive emotions in a spot you see often.

In The Book of Joy, the Dalai Lama and Archbishop Desmond Tutu discuss their views that, "the ultimate source of happiness is within us" and that much bigger than happiness is joy, a state of mind and heart that is available to all as a way of life.

Linda Martin is a retired licensed clinical social worker and family counselor.
