The Crime Report, c/o Rep. Eleanor Holmes Norton

Kevin and Demarcos were two of many lives cut short in the deadliest year for D.C. since 1997. The city saw a 36% increase in homicides this year, reaching 271 homicides by December 28. The overwhelming majority of these murders involved guns, according to city data.

Across the U.S., experts predict that year-end data for 2023 will show a seven to 10% decrease in homicides. Some cities – like Philadelphia and nearby Baltimore – have seen larger reductions in homicides, by 20% or more, a phenomenon that many experts attribute in part to recovery from the effects of the pandemic. With 2023's surge in homicides, the District has taken a tragically different path. Full article below...

The potential for developing smart cities in Washington D.C. is evaluated using cluster analysis. Built on previous research focused on clustering the Wards of Washington D.C., this study applies the same method to the communities of the District. The analysis uses indicators related to human capital, production, education, information technology, infrastructure, and other factors to assess the potential of each Ward.
