

THE TRUTH OF DIVINITY

By Matthew A. Michelangelo

We live in a world where the response to anything— even injustice is “well, that’s what they get.” Or something in a similar vein. The denotation of cause and effect no longer exists. No, nowadays we function as if it’s “cause and punishment.” Regardless of the holistic context. Based solely on flawed, subjective beliefs, and systematically oppressive laws, and greedy corporate policies that we know— ONLY, protect the company, institutions, knowledge gatekeepers, insatiable income disposals, millionaires, and billionaires—AKA 1%ers. The rest of us are already playing the Hunger Games; America is the arena. We, the people, the 99%, are already pinned against one another. Many of us are already the capital's lap dogs and bastard children— all the while the wealth gap multiples at an alarming rate. It saddens me that other nations are happy that this may be our fate, as if history has not told us that it is not solved, it will happen again, somewhere else. A lot of the other nations have moles, secret agents, pedophile elitists helping and keeping their own country down. It’s an illusion, a lie, the devil playing tricks. Call it whatever—whatever aligns with your beliefs, but can we do something quickly?

Yapping about made-up wars: LGBT vs straight, Christian vs everyone else, white vs everyone else. Trans vs. the American people. They are cannibalizing humanity; we are letting it happen. The elitists do this to dwindle the numbers that stand against their hypocrisy. There is strength in solidarity, not in how much you like or agree with someone. NOT IN MONEY. It’s in all the movies, books, songs, paintings, good lord, many of us have been lost by the end times already. This current age is Armageddon. Every war currently stems from religion. We are in a holy war. The genocide of Palestine — the Torah condemns Israel’s behavior, they’ve turned their back on their own God! Why? Because the elite know we are gods. We hold so much power. Capitalism is a system they set up to ship on God from us. The body is the temple... we house divinity. When we slow our nervous systems down, we remember that. So 1%ers do not let us. The mark of the beast is on red hats. Trump didn’t even swear on the Bible at the inauguration! That was a distraction that sent us into a frenzy, and a soul slipping out of a guilty ego. Trump not swearing on the bible was distraction meant to speed up our nerves. To choke our divinity back down with anger.

There is not one antichrist; there is no second coming of Christ. It's collective energy. It's a collective blessing and a collective curse. Call it whatever you want. There's not one savior. If we understand that God or the divine is within our body and remember that "the body is the temple," then we restore divinity within. Why do we struggle to understand that it's all happening internally? The meek will inherit the Earth...Meek, meaning, kind, optimistic, hopeful, those are the Divine's children. So that's why elitists eat, rape, and kill kids- to stall their overthrow. But it's a blocked pipe; it will come faster, harder, and wilder. What I am saying with this is that those who are humble, gentle, and submit to God's will (inner divinity-we are God, it is in us- we are the temple), rather than seeking worldly power, will ultimately receive the promised blessings and the future kingdom of God on Earth, which is peace on earth. the way every religion tells you to live, and mythology tells you to live. The ones who are angry and spiteful, and think it's funny to be mean, and the troll and blah blah blah blah are lost already. Forget them, they are doomed by evil and hypocrisy, by the illusion of a singular father of monstrosities. Hypocrisy is in every doctrine in some way or another. Islamic faith, Judaism, paganism, Christianity, Hinduism, Buddhism, and more. It is okay to read other doctrines; do not condemn other religions for their people. It only matters what you genuinely believe inside if Jesus or God has truly entered your heart, then nothing in any other religion is going to sway that (God is in them all they are the same.) The fact that people won't consider different ideas tells me they don't actually believe what they say or what they say they believe.

That tells me that your heart is empty, and that Jesus has not entered it because there would be no room for any other faith. So by proxy, you forsook the divine. It is very clear in almost every religion that I can think of that hypocrisy is the most condemning sin, which is what the entire book of Matthew warns against. People who live by duplicity and hypocrisy are the fruit of evil. So, I don't care about being called a bleeding heart liberal... I'd rather bleed from my fellow man than kill for money, power, and fame. I would rather cry for everyone than rape, eat, and sacrifice children. Besides, Democrats are just as evil. As the days go on, I become weary of every single Democrat. Democrats and Republicans are different sides of the same coin. Both parties bleed purple if you know what I mean. It's all a distraction. A veil over our eyes. We truly believe that knowledge is a sin. That's not the story of Adam and Eve told us. The meaning of the Garden of Eden that the story is telling us: Adam and Eve were kicked out of Eden because they no longer fully trusted in divinity.

In the Garden of Eden, there is no reason for them to have knowledge. Adam and Eve were provided for. Now with knowledge and awareness, Adam and Eve questioned everything. How was God supposed to give them anything if they were weary of the hand that had only fed? They no longer trusted anything, not even God. So God sought to fix it by casting them out. Knowledge without experience is nothing but skepticism. God is not jealous. God was called jealous by a HUMAN MAN– who had no way to comprehend God or why divinity is or does. God was called jealous by a human who doesn't know a damn thing.

How sacrilegious to perpetuate the Jealous God bullshit for so long– the idea of someone who cannot even understand something, calling the creator of the life and universe “jealous” because he couldn’t understand. That’s the biggest joke of life. More funny we still perpetuate it. Why? It’s to kill our own divinity. No human can understand the reasons of the universe, not even Jesus, which is why God made him human in the Bible. Jesus couldn’t be a complete vessel of the knowledge of the universe, divinity, God– no human can be. Do we see the point being made? That not even Jesus himself had all the answers, nor could he access them. Now that Adam and Eve had knowledge, they needed the experience of that knowledge to fully and truly believe again. We are in an era where Jesus could actually part the sky, and he would immediately be crucified all over again. To be called a drug addict, to be called a lunatic, to be called a threat to the government, etc., etc. Jesus would be killed on the spot immediately if he came back.

So, when I say these things, people act as if I’m trying to be high and mighty– oh my Lord, I couldn't care less about that. We are all in pain, though we refuse to acknowledge that the person in front of us IS THE pain. Do we see the devil in this? In the fallacies given to us by the government? In the hypocrisy of all of us? I don’t even care if you believe in Christianity; again, I think it would be beneficial for everybody to understand the message in the book of Matthew. To reiterate, it talks strictly about hypocrisy and how to spot the fruit of a bad tree, which are those who live by hypocrisy.

I want to be clear. I don't even believe that the Bible is historical. I think it's instructions on how to live. Internal instructions using analogies, epic stories, and poetry– and that's OK. I think that's beautiful. When I read the Bible, which I've done so many times, I'm in the process of rereading it. I read it in different roles, for example, I read it like the "Lord" is me that Jesus is talking about me every time God is referred to as "God," "him," the "Lord," etc. I pretend it is my very own soul is the person referred to. You don't have to believe that's truly what it says. Though for people who are so scared of betraying God, they don't even see that they have betrayed him long ago. They have let the godless fruit of bad trees rule the world. Convincing us that God is a jealous, vengeful God. Are we reading the same fucking book?

Also, we cannot use the Old Testament and the New Testament interchangeably, one because –once Jesus was born to die, thus saving us from sin forever, any rules from the Old Testament have been absolved with the death of Jesus, who died for us to get free will. God will intervene ever again– if we use the Bible as a historical event– no one believed God was a kind, just God, when he did intervene, nothing he did was ever truly respected or understood in one way or another, it was demonized by man. There is no need for Commandments or rigid, strict rules to keep people safe, for whatever reason. Free will is what will save you, but people don't think for themselves. They're forsaking the blessing given to us. We don't understand that free will is the end–I'll be all blessing. Praying to God to stop a plane from going down and praying to God to save a family from cancer is ludicrous! That's the point of free will, you are now meant to do that, if you have a bad feeling about going on the plane–DON'T GO ON IT! If you get Cancer, you try your hardest to fight it, not lie in bed praying.

Why would God ever intervene again when we all killed his only son for spreading his word? If I were God, you can call me a fool, but I sure as hell would not help anybody directly again. I would leave my tools happily, but you will figure it out after how many times you've forsaken me. But here's the funny part, I am God, you are God, but the source of God would never do such a thing. Every single person is a piece of God; it's literally written in the Bible. God doesn't have to do anything for us. He gave a part of himself upon the first breath of our birth because anything before is just a vessel, an empty vase with a heartbeat. It is also very clear. Life starts at the first breath. God built it into the blessing of free will he bestowed on us. The Bible is a story meant to be read from cover to cover.

It is not meant to be read out of order, believe it or not –No Chronological story is EVER meant to be read out of order. Yes, the Bible is a chronological story. Story, in the sense of: a sequence of events that follow one after another, whether real or fictional. Whether you think the Bible is fictional is a personal belief, and honestly, it's OK because it exercises the blessing of free will. Thus, fostering a reunion of Divinity.
