I bought the app but there are so little different cards that ist maximum of 2 hours playtime ...The game's great, but the app looks and feels highly outdated. 25 people found this review helpful Flag inappropriate Show review history The app is bugged and poorly programmed. You keep getting the same card in a new game as the last card in the previous game, which means you always have to skip the first card of a new game and wait 30 seconds.

Moreover, there is no way to skip this waiting time. Skipping to the next player/skipping the card would be a required added feature. Finally, it should be very easy to compose a card with 5 random words from the 2400 (480x5) options, which will give much m play fun in the long term... 26 people found this review helpful Hello, Many thanks for your feedback. Players generally play in teams of two to sixteen. One player must guess a word from their teammate's explanation, much like Charades, with the aim to guess as many possible answers in 30 seconds. The main restriction on the explanation is that it may not contain the actual word or part of the word. Objective Each team moves a token along a track formed by a sequence of squares. Each square has a different picture on it. Each round the team draws a card and then has 30 seconds to explain up to five different words printed on that card. The team can move forward one square for each correct answer. The objective is to reach the end of the track first. Gameplay At the start of each round, the team throws the special 30 Seconds dice to determine that round's handicap. The dice has six sides and the values can be 0, 1 or 2. One player draws a card. Each card has a yellow side and a blue side. The player must use the side that corresponds the square that their token is on. There are five words printed on each side. The opposing team then turns over the 30-second timer. The team's score is determined by taking the number of correct answers and subtracting the handicap. The team moves their token forward by the same number of squares as their score for the current round. Clues Clues are generally short with a strong emphasis on synonyms and associations. For example, if the answer is "Gauteng" the clue might be as simple as "in which province is Johannesburg found?". A possible clue might be "The area which was named after the first black president of South Africa", to which the answer is "Nelson Mandela Bay". The official rules regarding clues are restrictive and provision is made for penalties (moving backwards). In most circumstances house rules are more relaxed to increase the speed and enjoyment of the game. COMMENTS
