PROFESSIONAL ATHLETE

Patrick's two childhood dreams were to move to the United States of America and play intercollegiate basketball at an American university, and then eventually turn professional.

His first childhood dream came true in 2009, when he moved to the U.S.A. to attend university. Patrick was quickly chosen as a captain of the men's basketball team, and 4 years later, Patrick was named both academic and athletic All-American and was awarded National Player of The Year.

After graduating with highest honours, Patrick's second childhood dream came true when he signed his first professional basketball contract. He played professionally in Scotland, England, Australia, Germany and Italy, before retiring in 2018. He then moved to Nova Scotia to start a family, begin his new life as an entrepreneur, and focus more time on his two biggest passions outside of his family; writing and speaking.
