Create Your Medicare.gov Account

A simple sign-in guide | Checked October 14, 2026

First, obtain your assigned Medicare Number. Your Medicare card or your Social Security benefit verification letter can provide it after enrollment is processed. An identity-provider account alone does not replace that requirement.

Start from Medicare.gov

1. Open Medicare.gov/account/login.
2. Choose Login.gov, ID.me or CLEAR. These Medicare sign-in options are free. Reuse your selected provider account if you already have one.
3. Use your own email and complete the identity-verification prompts.
4. Follow Medicare's instructions to create or connect your Medicare account. Keep your Medicare card nearby.

Existing Medicare username and password? Once you connect that account to an identity service, its old Medicare username and password will stop working. Follow current Medicare instructions carefully.

What you can do in your account

Print your Medicare card, review Original Medicare claims, and save medications for plan comparisons. Check the Part A and B effective dates on your card. Having a card does not mean coverage has already started. Medicare and Social Security remain separate services even if you use the same sign-in provider.

Keep control of your account

Keep passwords and security codes private. Start from official agency links and enter identity information only in their secure process. If someone helps, enter your own credentials. Ask the agency for a secure way to send any insurance documents; do not email passwords, security codes or Social Security numbers.

Account screens can change. Follow the latest official instructions. MyInsuranceGuy is an independent agency, not Medicare or Social Security.
