Leisure and Socializing

A psychological condition can create notable exhaustion and stress. The items here are to help take one’s mind off problems and get away from acquiring more stress, allowing one to refresh and be better focused afterwards (as well as just have fun).

Some might feel guilty about enjoying themselves; there may be a sense that one should be working harder to improve their life, and if such is not being done, one is a “slacker,” “deserves to suffer,” or is “taking advantage of the system.” People need to take time to let go of things and recover psychologically and physically, and not doing so can be unhealthy in both of those areas; it is all right to have fun, kick back, and enjoy one’s self.

Some items are marked with an asterisk (*) at the end; this is to indicate an activity or location (or a related group/event) that has been known to provide alcohol, which could create a difficulty for those recovering from addiction.
