Maisy is a sweet, affectionate girl who is starting to show more of her personality every day. While she can be a little shy when meeting new people, she warms up quickly and forms strong bonds with the people she trusts.

She's very much still a puppy and has all the enthusiasm that comes with it! Maisy loves being close to her people, can get a little jumpy and mouthy when excited, and is still learning her manners. The good news is that she responds well to gentle redirection and is eager to engage with her humans.

Maisy is very dog-social and would thrive in a home with another confident dog. She enjoys canine companionship and gains confidence from having a furry friend around!

Her foster reports that she sleeps well in her crate overnight, rides beautifully in the car, and has been wonderful for handling and nail trims. She already knows a few basic commands and is a smart girl, though she sometimes likes to put her own doberman spin on things.

Like many sensitive dogs, unfamiliar people can make Maisy nervous at first, particularly men. Because of this, we think she'll do best with a patient family who will continue helping her build confidence through positive experiences and consistent guidance.

Maisy would thrive with an adopter who understands active, intelligent breeds and is excited to continue her training and help her become the best version of herself. With time, patience, and a little encouragement, we know this special girl is going to make an incredible companion!
