VI. Finance & Money Management

Savings & Checking

| ORGANIZATION TYPE | EXPLANATION |
|-------------------|--|
| Checking Account | Both are ways to manage money. Checking accounts are used to get quick access to your cash, pay for in-store and online purchases with a debit card. Money must be in the account in order to use it. It is not a system of credit. You can pay bills with it and write paper checks that will draw the payment from your account. |
| Savings Account | Used for saving money for short- to long-term goals, like unexpected expenses, vacations, or home improvements. Savings accounts typically earn interest on deposits, so the more you save, the more you earn. There may be limits to how many transactions you can make without paying a fee, and some savings accounts may have withdrawal limits. |

| | |
|---|--|
| Various local banks and credit unions | When choosing a bank or credit union, you can consider things like: fees, locations, services, online banking capabilities, and interest rates. |
| Check Cashing Services & Payday Loan Stores | Check cashing stores are businesses that help people who receive checks but have difficulty cashing them. They provide a way to access money without a bank account, and are part of the financial services system for many Americans who are underbanked or unbanked. A disadvantage of check cashing stores is that they charge high fees in order to cash your check. A payday loan is a short-term, high-cost loan that is typically due on the borrower's next payday. Payday loans are also known as cash-advance or check-advance loans. |
