THE SHERIFF'S BIG RODEO

JASON ZASKY

"Maury County is really big in the rodeo world," begins Lieutenant Kyle Cheek of the Maury County Sheriff's Department, making reference to the region being home to more than a few rodeo riders, including Culleoka native Jesse Keysaer.

So it's fitting that on the weekend of July 11-12, Maury County will be at the center of the International Professional Rodeo Association (IPRA) universe, when the Sheriff's Department, the Reserve Deputy Unit, and the Maury County School Resource Officers host the 21st annual Maury County Sheriff's Rodeo.

"We put it all together and raise the funds for our community outreach programs," explains Lt. Cheek, noting that the rodeo benefits programs like the department's annual Shop with a Cop event, during which upwards of 100 local children receive Christmas presents.

"We also have an event where we give away approximately 80 Thanksgiving dinners," adds Lt. Cheek, reminding us that part of the inspiration for starting the rodeo was the need to fund these annual outreach programs. Two decades later, the Maury County Sheriff's Rodeo keeps getting bigger and better, with upwards of 450 contestants and 6,000 spectators expected this year across the two nights.

This time around, contestants will compete in eight events, including bull riding, saddle bronc riding, team roping, cowgirl breakaway roping, cowgirl barrel racing and tie down roping.

"Everybody's favorite event is the bull riding. Those are some big animals, and it's amazing to see how strong they are and how much force they have,” marvels Lt. Cheek, adding that Autaugaville, Alabama-based rodeo clown Trent McFarland will be the event’s “funny man.” It’s the first time McFarland (a self-described “professional rodeo entertainer and barrel man”) has been featured at the event in many years.

But the fun doesn’t stop with McFarland, the bull riding, and the seven other rodeo events. Over two dozen food, drink, and ice cream vendors will be on hand, and the festivities conclude with a fireworks show.

“We will also have a free Kid’s Zone sponsored by the Maury County Visitor’s Bureau, which will feature a petting zoo, free pony rides, jump houses, and face painting. The Kid’s Zone opens at 5 p.m. and continues until the rodeo starts at 8 p.m.,” advises Lt. Cheek, who says the main events will be followed by “slack”—an overflow round where contestants not drawn into the main performance lineup have a chance to compete.

And much like last year, contestants will be coming from states around the U.S., including North and South Dakota, Nebraska, Oklahoma, and Texas, among many others.

“One reason we get ropers from all over the country is we put up $1,000 ‘bump money’ per event,” says Lt. Check, referring to prize money added to the rodeo’s purse above and beyond the standard payout. “The total prize money last year was over $53,000,” he says, before marveling at how rodeo has become bigger and more mainstream than ever before—not to mention a way to get a scholarship for a college education.

“UT-Martin has a rodeo team,” he notes, referring to the 35 cowboys and cowgirls who compete for the Skyhawks, including several who hail from Middle Tennessee. “In fact, one of our officers has a daughter who went to college to do rodeo.”

MULETOWN MOTORCYCLES

JASON ZASKY

Muletown Motorcycles—found on Woodland Street just south of downtown—has only been open since January 2025, but the shop already has a ‘just right’ feel, according to owner Rob Curtis.

“We were looking for a space in Columbia and found a place just down the street from here with a ‘For Lease’ sign on it. But when I called, the owner said he had leased out the building the day before. Then he told me about this location, which, as it turns out, is better than the first place we looked at. I’m glad it happened that way; it’s fate,” offers Curtis.

“From what I understand, this building was built in the 1940s and was originally home to a milk processing plant, so it’s got an old-school feel to it. Everything in it is old and rustic, which fits very well with the Harley-Davidson vibe.”

That’s a decidedly good thing since Muletown Motorcycles works on Harley-Davidson’s exclusively—handling everything from maintenance to tires to performance motor builds to installing handlebars.

Muletown Motorcycles also has a partnership with Aaron Staudinger of Triple Shot Tuning, who handles the tuning process, at a separate location.

“Any time you make a change to either the induction or the major components in the engine, you need to re-tune for that,” says Staudinger, who has a racing background that positioned him for the detailed work that it takes to be a good tuner.

“Having the ability to tune closes the circle as it applies to the performance capabilities of Muletown Motorcycles,” continues Staudinger. “(Rob and his techs) can do physical builds on a bike—whether it be engine, suspension, etc.—and then we trailer it over here and tune those combinations perfectly. Between our two businesses shaking hands in that way, we are full-service, from build to tune to delivery," he says.

"Our goal is to be the go-to shop in this area for all Harley-Davidson repairs and performance needs," adds Curtis, noting that his shop is easy to get to and within walking distance of downtown Columbia.

"You can bring in your bike and walk two blocks to downtown and get lunch while your bike is being repaired," he says, before noting that Muletown Motorcycles can also be of assistance even when you can't ride to the shop.

"We have a towing and pickup & delivery service as well," notes Curtis. "We recently had a customer that hit a pothole on the freeway. It blew out his front tire, and he was stranded on the freeway at 10 o'clock at night, but we went out and rescued him off the side of the road."

Meanwhile, Curtis—who rides a 2018 CVO Street Glide and also owns "four or five other bikes"—is working hard to spread the word about his new shop, doing everything from hosting bike nights at the shop to traveling to bike shows and selling branded merchandise, including T-shirts and hats.

"We are working to develop a merchandise & apparel area in the shop, and we are going to start attending First Fridays," offers Curtis, where you will find him under a canopy handing out business cards and talking shop.

Curtis says he loves living and working in Columbia, and is optimistic about the future of the town—and Muletown Motorcycles.

"I like the small-town feel of Columbia and how everyone knows each other and is friendly with each other. It's a growing community, and it's just going to keep getting bigger. But there are no other independent (Harley-Davidson) shops between Franklin and Lewisburg, so there's a real need for a good bike shop in this area."
