The Mouse in the House

Tori could not sleep.

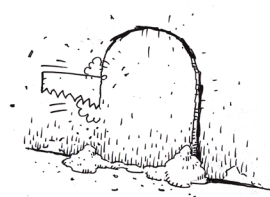

She tried counting sheep, burying her head in her pillow and even sticking her fingers in her ears.

But nope, nothing worked. It was all because of those funny noises coming from downstairs.

"That's it!" Tori declared. "I'm going to find out what those noises are."

She pushed her blankets off, jumped out of bed and stuck her feet into her slippers.

Down the staircase she went.

When she put her foot on the last step she heard, "s-q-u-e-a-k."

"Ooh, I don't like that step," she said to herself.

The noises were coming from the kitchen at the end of the hallway. It wasn't just the noises she heard. It was singing, too!

She tiptoed down the hallway and peeked into the kitchen.

There, standing on a stool, was a ... mouse?
And, he was holding a whisk in his tail and pouring flour into a large bowl set on the kitchen counter!

Tori stepped into the kitchen.
