

About David Hamade:

Started my entrepreneurial journey when I first came to London over 30 years ago, and despite having no connections and a limited budget, I still dared to create a high-profile business, helping major organizations to launch into new markets.

In under one year, I secured a contract from NatWest Bank to assist them launch their new technology, Mondex, in new countries.

I won the project against competition from a world-leading consultancy firm.

Since then, I have helped many companies, and recently the appointed consultant for a £20 billion corporation in the London Financial City to launch them in an important international market.