

NEM 3.0: 10 MOST ASKED QUESTIONS

For Homeowners

1. What is NEM 3.0?

NEM 3.0 is a new version of the net energy metering (NEM) billing structure that goes into effect April 14th, 2023, in California, enabling utilities to reduce homeowner export rates.

2. Who is impacted by NEM 3.0?

Customers of:

- ▄ Pacific Gas & Electric (PG&E)
- ▄ Southern California Edison (SCE)
- ▄ San Diego Gas & Electric (SDG&E)

3. When does NEM 3.0 take effect?

NEM 3.0 applies to all systems with an interconnection application dated after April 14th, 2023.

4. Can I avoid NEM 3.0?

Yes. Obtain the preferred NEM 2.0 status by working with one of our trusted installers to ensure your approved interconnection agreement is submitted by April 14th, 2023.

5. I already have solar. Will NEM 3.0 impact me?

No. All systems with an approved interconnection application to the utility, dated on or before April 14th, 2023, will retain their current NEM 1.0 or NEM 2.0 status.

6. If my system is under NEM 2.0, can I add battery storage and keep my status?

Yes. If your system's approved interconnection agreement was submitted to the utility by April 14th, 2023, you may add battery storage to your system and retain your NEM 2.0 status - even after the April 14th, 2023, deadline.

7. If a NEM 1.0 or NEM 2.0 system changes ownership, will it retain its original NEM status?

Yes, the system will retain its original NEM 1.0 or NEM 2.0 status.

8. Can a battery help me save money in NEM 3.0?

Yes. To maximize savings and keep bills low in NEM 3.0, homeowners can use a battery to store excess power during the day for use at night when rates are highest.

9. Will I be able to sell excess energy back to the grid in NEM 3.0?

Yes. However, your rate of compensation will be reduced by the utility.
