

Hello, Friends!

April is Here!

"Raindrops Keep Falling on My Head" - Burt Bacharach's song is our theme for April. Rain is necessary to bring us the May Flowers we all look forward to each Spring. Even though we may get out during this Coronavirus and walk in the rain, you are not alone in your struggle to get through this world crisis. We are in the same boat, just sitting six feet away from each other! Stay alert, stay safe, stay healthy. Welcome to April.

Month Number 4

April makes month number four for my daily postings with a picture and a little text to make you think. If you like them, please say so. If there is an idea for some in the future you'd like to see,

Speak up! As a copywriter for PowerPoints, videos, and static print ads, I can work with you and your company on newsletters and websites. Contact me for projects you need my assistance on. I'm home. :)

Substitute Special

I was asked by one of my bestie friends to step into her pulpit and lead her church while she was recovering from some surgery. The main difference was there wasn't any congregation in the church! This was all done live-streaming from the church that was like others around the world, closed for the safety of all the people. It is very different leading a virtual church through music, scripture, and message when no one is there to interact with you. I am glad I could help you out, Pastor Sue. I love to write and speak, and sing and lead. So, I guess I could say I enjoyed myself. It was a little weird with only the live-streaming staff there to help me out in the service. Pastor Sue will be back streaming from her home for Palm Sunday and Easter. Let me know if you need any help! I am ready to serve.

"This too shall pass." - an advisor to King Solomon

The Coronavirus is devastating and destroying families around the world. As a Writer, Lay Speaker for the United Methodist Church, Voiceover Artist, Vocalist, and someone who is a part of life here on this planet, I can say with confidence that one day, This too shall pass. There will be dawn in the near future that will let us out of our homes and back into a normal life, again. Hopefully soon. While we wait it out in the safety of our homes, let us keep those that are suffering from this virus in our thoughts and prayers. I hope they recover fast.

Kind regards,
Cynthia Saarie
