President's Message

"These Are the Times That Try Men's Souls"

This famous line by Thomas Paine was found in his second pamphlet, "The American Crisis", published in December 1776.

Like the beginning of our nation, we too are experiencing challenges that can throw this Republic into a downward spiral. By the time you read this article the election results of 2026 will begin to show some results. Whatever the outcome, let no one doubt that we are in difficult times and no one can foresee the course that will be taken to begin the process of renewed confidence. We will be rid of the political ads, the mudslinging, social media campaigns, meant only to confuse the voter and of course the ground swell of questionable promises. The news media has had a field day with the daily polls which differed depending on what you watched, read or heard. It was Sir Winston Churchill who said: "A lie gets half way around the world before the truth gets its pants on". Of course, Churchill was unaware of the internet, A.I. and over all, the media explosion.

Frankly, I'm tired of listening to the voices of opposition when there doesn't seem to be concrete alternatives and the dissident voices finding fault while perceiving gloom on all sides. When times get tough like this, I turn to the great leaders of our past. In doing so, I'm able to better understand and embrace the vision they had when creating the foundation government of this great nation. I find solace in knowing the strength and will of those leaders who carefully prepared the framework of our democracy. It was a prominent Philadelphia socialite, Elizabeth Powel, in 1776 who asked Ben Franklin: "What have we got, a Republic or Monarchy?" Franklin's response was," a Republic, if you can keep it".

It is a framework that has been tested many times but not to the degree we are now facing. Local city governments have been enduring the over reach by the leadership in Sacramento for years. What will the future hold after this election?

It's time that we the people, take a step back and reflect on this outcome whatever it may be and focus on our homes, family, and God as we dig down to our pioneer roots and be more self sufficient as a people. We will be judged more by what we do at home and the strength of family than anything else. Sacrifice and self- discipline lay ahead, a time frame in which our patience and our will, will be tested. During this time of courage and challenge, we must unite in our heritage of the past in order to fulfill the hopes for the future.

Remember too, in our modern history, the sacrifices of the "Greatest Generation". The quote by President John F. Kennedy seems more poignant than ever…" Ask not what your country can do for you, ask what you can do for your country" and of course the quote by President Reagan; "Freedom is only one generation from extinction." The future path is for us to pave for our posterity.

Linda Koelling,
President, OCGSRW

The AMERICAN CRISIS. (No. I.)

By the Author of COMMON SENSE

THESE are the times that try men's souls: The summer soldier and the sunshine patriot will, in this crisis, shrink from the service of his country; but he that stands it now, deserves the love and thanks of man and woman. Tyranny, like hell, is not easily conquered; yet we have this consolation with us, that the harder the conflict, the more glorious the triumph. What we obtain too cheap, we esteem too lightly: 'Tis dearness only that gives every thing its value. Heaven knows how to put a proper price upon its goods; and it would be strange indeed, if so celestial an article as FREEDOM should not be highly rated. Britain, with an army to enforce her tyranny, has declared, that she has a right (not only to TAX) but "to BIND us in ALL CASES whatsoever," and if being bound in that manner, is not slavery, then is there not such a thing as slavery upon earth. Even the expression is impious, for so unlimited a power can belong only to GOD.

Whether the Independence of the Continent was declared too soon, or delayed too long, I will not now enquire into, as an argument unseasonable during the present contest, it was too early by at least one year. And a wise people would have formed themselves into a regular and permanent body of government, the moment they found the impossibility of a reconciliation. Had this been the case, we should have escaped the calamities of two campaigns, which are lost, and the additional miseries which we have yet to feel, if the spirit of court influence and court dependence, should prevail in framing governments for us. Nothing but the most extraordinary degree of wisdom, can keep those men from ambition, whom the choice of the people shall place in power. Avarice is the never failing vice of mankind; and though a part only of the community are infected with it, the whole community will be subject to the consequences. Moderation in temper is always a sign of wisdom, but moderation in principle is often a sign of cowardice. The Quakers have shewn us the one, and the Tories the other. The former acted consistently with their belief, the latter did not. Wisdom is the first quality in government, and absolutely necessary to counteract the force of the other two, which operate by brute power. Neither of them regard the end for which government is appointed, which is universal peace, and the protection and happiness of mankind. Hitherto we have been running the race of danger, but we now appear to be arrived within the power of choice, and the next halting place, will probably determine, whether we shall finally sink into slavery, or maintain our liberties; whether we shall be the countrymen of Washington, or the subjects of Howe.

Those who expect to reap the blessings of freedom, must, like men, undergo the fatigues of supporting it. The sunshine patriot and summer soldier will, in this crisis, shrink from the service of his country; but he that stands it now, deserves the love and thanks of man and woman. Tyranny, like hell, is not easily conquered; yet we have this consolation with us, that the harder the conflict, the more glorious the triumph. Serving on Club Committees
Get involved; Make a difference; Be part of the Solution

OCGSRW is looking for members to expand their interests in trying to accomplish the goals of the club. Our motto, "Coming Together/Working together", provides the platform for our club's goals to provide: information and education about the issues facing our community, state and nation as well as provide support for our Republican candidates.

Please consider taking time to engage in one or more of the following committees. A brief description of each one is provided. Once a committee is formed, a committee chair is selected by those members and the work can begin. The amount of time spent is up to the committee.

1. Activism/Americanism
   Committee members will keep track of state and congressional bills of interest to be reported to the members at meetings and to be printed in the newsletter.
2. By-Laws
   This committee will assist the Parliamentarian regarding the operation of the club rules/guidelines.
3. Campaign/Voter Registration
   Members can work on various campaigns as needed through the OC Republican Central Committee during election years.
4. Finance/Audit
   Members on this committee will assist the treasurer as needed and audit the club finances once a year.
5. Hospitality/Check in
   Members of this group will be the greeters at each of the luncheon meetings and set up/ take down the table decorations.
6. Marketing/Communications
   Committee members will oversee the newsletter preparation & distribution, social media updates and maintain the club website.
7. Ways & Means/Fundraising Events
   Committee members will plan and organize a summer event and holiday event each year to support special club activities.
8. Youth Scholarships & Other Special Programs for Club Outreach
   Members shall engage in organizing and selecting scholarship candidates in the spring each year.

We encourage all members to consider taking the time to engage in a committee of choice during some of your time as a member of OCGSRW.

A Dragon at the Doorsteps

By: Fred Tarnay

We lost our extended family to the war, the war they said would end all wars, World War II. And it was not just a war as we think of war: a brutal deadly conflict but a war for souls and minds.

Aunts, uncles, cousins, grandparents … gone, killed or reduced to abject poverty. They are all now martyrs for freedom and heroes that loved a nation that gave them birth and nurtured them, and for that they had to endure a Socialist/Communist wave that overnight unleashed its great evil on the country by a military force that could not be repulsed.

My mother would tell us wonderful stories of our large extended family and the peaceful life we would have lived growing up basking in their love and company. I try at times to imagine being with them, among them… We have a few pictures, but it became too hard, too far away, too late… too lonely and too dark. It went like that for years.

And then I found my own family here in the new world, the family of my beautiful wife who surround me with their love and care. Everything that was lost was given back and more. My children, my family are everything that I had ever wanted, by the grace of God is here and now.

But that great evil lives on and haunts the world, a dark dragon wanting nothing but to devour because it feeds on evil. I knew it then and I know it today. I see its fangs and feel its hot breath upon my neck.

If you truly understood, you would be terrified of this great force of evil, its dark cunning, its lies and its false company. It lives on envy and hatred and rages indiscriminate wherever there is weakness, ignorance, or a people too comfortable to notice the chains being forged around them.

It no longer comes with force, tanks and guns. Today it creeps in wearing the smiling mask of “compassion,” “equality,” “equity” and “social justice.” It divides families and neighbors with talk of oppressors and victimhood, turns children against parents, it inhabits schools and universities with lies, and promises free things that are never free. It feeds the poor with one hand while stealing their dignity with the other. It whispers that success is theft and that the strong must be punished so the weak may feel taller.

I saw its lurking shadow grow during the Obama years, when the dragon first stretched its wings in the open. Hope and Change became Control and Division; the government grew fat, stole and wasted citizens money while families grew poorer, and envy was dressed up as fairness. Then came the Biden years, and the dragon was let loose. Inflation that devoured savings, borders flung open while citizens were locked down, energy choked and speech itself put on trial. The same lies I heard as a young boy in Central Europe—are now spoken with American accents on television and in classrooms. The same envy, the same hatred, the same false promise that government must replace God, family and the individual’s freedom, pride and self-respect. All with a smile.

I no longer fear for myself. I fear for my children, grandchildren and beyond because I recognize again that dragon’s hot breath on the neck of our nation…. and I remember.

And I can’t stay silent while the dragon circles again, hungry for the souls it has not yet claimed.

This is why I speak. Because once you have stared into the eyes of the dragon, you never again mistake its presence for some mere politics. Now you know pure evil when it smiles at you and calls itself “progress, savior and friend”

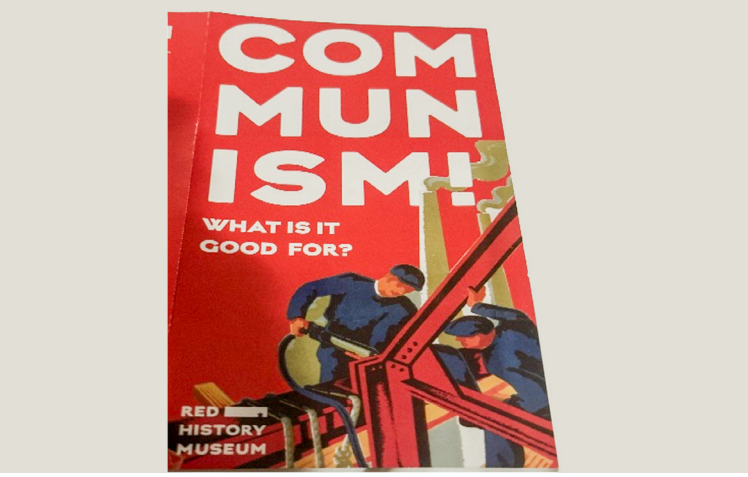

So, learn and understand it for what it is. Beware, be vigilant, teach your families, your children and fight the evil until there is no life left because it will never go away, it waits, always, for a new generation to devour.

And all the while love this nation, this America the Beautiful that raised, welcomed and nurtured you.

And above all pray, pray incessantly, pray on your knees that she continues to hold the torch of liberty, the only light to the World.

The Real Concerns of Communism

Our member, Julie Allen is in Dubrovnik, Croatia. She & her husband went to a museum dedicated to the failure of Communism, that Croatia had to endure since 1945. It declared independence in 1991. They then were subjected to the invasion by Serbia & Montenegro. In 1995, Croatia was victorious, in stopping another takeover. We must make sure that America continues to stand for liberty and freedom.

Communism is a sociopolitical and economic idea that strives to establish a classless society, abolish private ownership of the means of production, and lead to disappearance of the state in the traditional sense. In its core is the principle of equality and solidarity, where wealth and resources are shared according to needs, not according to ownership or power.
Issues of justice, inequality, or a better society have been discussed by humans since ancient times, when people dreamed of a golden age and a society devoid of inequality through myths about paradise on earth. Religions offered their own versions of a more just world, if not in this life, then at least in the afterlife. Many literary and philosophical works have dealt with these topics, and it is precisely after the 16th century book Utopia by Thomas More that many ideas and works about a more just society are still called “utopian”.
The changes brought about by the Industrial Revolution in the second half of the 18th century (accelerated class stratification of society, the development of capitalism, accelerated urbanization, difficult living conditions for workers, and general inequality in the distribution of wealth) stimulated a more active analysis of social circumstances and reflection on how to shape a better and fairer future.

Fire and Lace

By: Phoebe Wise

Prophetic dreams: Most people have heard of them, even if they haven't experienced one.

On Friday, October 16, the day before her wedding, my daughter Laura came downstairs to breakfast early. She seemed a little upset.

"Mom, I had the most terrible dream last night. I dreamed that the ridges around our house were on fire, and all I could do was scream, 'Save the dress! Save the dress!'"

She meant her wedding dress, a lacy confection with a long, flowing train. I laughed nervously and pleaded with her not to say such terrible things out loud. Then she and her friend Liz, who had traveled from New Hampshire to be a bridesmaid, set off together for a pre-wedding hair appointment.

I returned to my kitchen duty of preparing food for the following morning. The wedding was scheduled for noon on Saturday, and the anticipated 5am wake-up call demanded a substantial breakfast: my favorite green chile and bacon/egg casserole, and pumpkin muffins. I had just finished making the muffins when the power went out. Thankfully the outage only lasted a few minutes.

A little after eleven a.m. I started hearing helicopters. "Camp Pendleton must be having a practice", I thought. Then large flocks of crows and other birds started crowding into the tree in my backyard and circling the canyon of San Juan Hills Estates. What the…?

Shortly after that we smelled smoke. My husband Larry and I poked our heads out the front door and saw the flames at the top of the ridge in front of our house. We were facing the east side of the hill, now covered by an immense plume. A fire truck zoomed up and parked right across the street. The fireman jumped out to attach a hose to the fire hydrant and started spraying a long arch of water that reached all the way up to the fire line.

I yelled to Larry to open the garage door and back out our two cars. It was around noon.

I took a minute to text the people on my Neighborhood Watch message group: "Open your garage doors in case we have another power failure. Prepare to evacuate."

Back to my own situation. First, we grabbed our go bags, which contained personal essentials and important documents. Next, we went for wallet, purse, computers.

"That's good enough", I thought. The fire was moving down the slope, headed straight for us. Even though the Santa Ana wind was blowing the "right" way, pushing against the fire, it was still approaching rapidly, consuming the brush. We could hear the crackle, feel its heat. Believe me, the only thought I had was to escape with my life.

Then, in my mind, I heard Laura's voice, re-telling her dream: "Save the dress! Save the dress!"

I knew what I had to do.

It was either the stupidest or bravest thing I have ever done, but I decided to save the dress. And the clothes we needed for the next day. I tore upstairs.

First came the lacy cupcake of a dress with its six-foot train. I stuffed it into its pink bag and ran downstairs to stage it on the dining room table. I ran back up and grabbed Laura's two go bags and sent them bumping down the staircase. Luckily, Liz had her two soft-sided two travel bags semi-packed already. I zipped them up and tossed them after Laura's.

I got my daughter on the phone, briefly described the emergency, and asked her where the smaller wedding items were located. As she told me their whereabouts, I swept them into a large suitcase—make-up, hair ornaments, veil, shoes, even her dress for the rehearsal dinner later that evening. On top of her items I threw my own wedding apparel. Larry did likewise for his clothes. Then we dragged the bags outside and stuffed them into the cars.

Last came the dress, the dress of Laura's dreams, the sine qua non of the wedding.

(Ok, it wasn't truly essential for the wedding ceremony, but it was still very nice that she didn't have to get married in what she wore for her hair appointment.)

I threw the pink bag on top of the pile of luggage, snapped one picture of the inferno which I was certain would soon consume my home, and we drove out of the neighborhood. It was 12:30pm, roughly 30 minutes after we started preparing to evacuate.

After turning onto La Novia, we instantly got stuck in a slow-moving snake of a traffic jam, which turned into a complete stall. An older lady who was evacuating with her frail-looking mother rammed me from behind as I was sitting there. I got out, we exchanged information, and I told her not to worry. We both had a lot more to worry about than a fender-bender.

Surprisingly, the line started crawling along again, and in about thirty minutes we were able to reach our destination, the Residence Inn on the other side of I-5. Luckily, we had reserved a large block of rooms for our out-of-town family and friends, including a couple of just-in-case extra suites, so we were able to house ourselves.

Many friends, including several from our Club, knew my area was probably affected by the fire, and texted their concern that evening. They also wanted to know if the wedding would still take place the next day. I said I didn't know and asked for prayers. Everyone came through with requests for heavenly assistance, and I am happy to report that Laura got to have the wedding of her dreams, in the dress of her dreams.

And they all lived happily ever after.

Now, the point of this story is not just to spin a yarn, but to ask myself, and to get all of you to ask yourselves, what can we learn from the Norte fire of October 17? Most of us have lived in California many years and are familiar with emergency preparedness, but I can now say that it is one thing to read about an emergency and another thing to experience one.

First, what did Larry and I do right?

1. We immediately opened the garage door and backed out cars. It is a lot easier to open a garage door with power than without it.

2. We did not wait to be told to evacuate. By the time my neighbor decided to leave, the traffic jam was so bad that it took her two and a half hours to get to the Residence Inn instead of the thirty minutes it took me. People who waited even later could not get out of the neighborhood at all.

3. All three household members had go bags.

4. We joined Neighborhood Watch. A year ago I volunteered as a captain and set up message groups. I was able to alert my street and get on-the-ground info about the fire after we evacuated. I also had the Watch Duty app on my phone. If you don't know what that is, go download it immediately.

5. Last, but not least of the things we did right, was to always vote Republican. To know why this matters, just compare the outcome of the Palisades and Altadena fires of January 2025 in LA County with the outcome of the Norte fire in Orange County:

LA County: 31 people killed, 16,246 structures destroyed,

Orange County: zero lives lost, 6 homes destroyed

These figures are real, they are shocking, they are tragic. Similar weather conditions, similar terrain, and orders of magnitude difference in outcomes. Why?

For decades Orange County has been blessed with the service of many commonsense Republicans. They have been on the Board of Supervisors and likewise in its police and fire agencies. Much, more so than in LA County, where the majority Democrat officials tend to be corrupt or out of touch with reality, or both.

Our Orange County Fire Authority was so prepared for this event. With the forecast of high temperatures and the Santa Ana winds, they knew fires were going to break out. They were ready with spotters, planes, and copters. They had high tech drones and drilling equipment to search for hot spots. And those wonderful OCFA guys… They stayed with our neighborhood through the night on Friday, pushing back the fires that were right across the street from our homes.

On Saturday night, they slept on top of their trucks while their comrades stood watch, ready to quench any flare ups. The entire neighborhood fell in love with them, supplying their field command table with cold drinks, pizza, and J.D. Flannel doughnuts.

OK, this ends my aggressive pitch to always vote Republican.

Now, what did I do wrong? I'm sure there were many things, but in the interest of brevity I will list just two:

1. "Darn it! I should have cleared that bird's nest that was blocking the dryer vent!" That's what I was thinking as I drove away on Friday. I knew if any of the hot ashes I saw blowing in the wind were to land on that nest, it would act like kindling to lead the fire straight inside. When we returned Saturday night, we found not only ash, but blackened chunks of brush covering our house and yard. If a Chinook helicopter had not dumped a load of water on our house, it probably would have been toast.

2. Last thing I did wrong: let my daughter schedule her wedding on October 17. I have never forgotten living through the Loma Prieta earthquake of 1989 in the Bay Area, but I was trying not to be superstitious about the date. Lesson learned. No more family celebrations will be scheduled on October 17. Ever.

God Bless America...A Tribute to the Founding Fathers

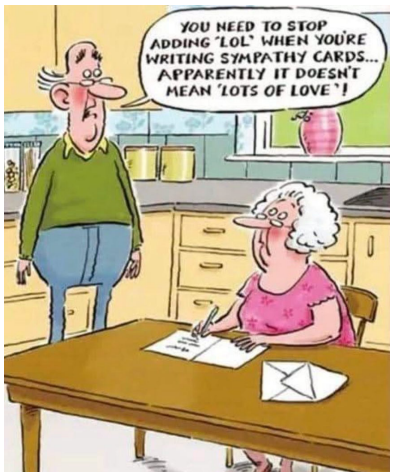

Join us on November 18 for a special day honoring America as the 250th year comes to a close. Historical impressionists will entertain us as we remember the beginnings of America. OCGSRW Board members will also participate as we give thanks to our founders and bring history to life. Their divinely inspired decisions created the greatest nation on earth. Let us give thanks to the freedoms we enjoy.
